Cox Is Ex-Solicitor General

Harvard Professor Is Chosen To Direct Watergate Probe

From Wire Dispatches

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Attorney General-designate Elliot L. Richardson today named Archibald Cox, Harvard Law School professor and former U.S. solicitor general, as the special prosecutor to investigate the Watergate affair.

Mr. Richardson told a press conference he was confident that Mr. Cox, who served in the Justice Department during the Democratic administrations of Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, would be confirmed in the post by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The committee, which has delayed acting on Mr. Richardson's confirmation pending definition of how the special prosecutor would work, has scheduled a hearing Monday where both Mr. Richardson and Mr. Cox will appear.

Mr. Richardson, once a student in a labor-law class taught by Prof. Cox at Harvard, said that the prosecutor would have a free hand to choose his own staff from within or without the Justice Department.

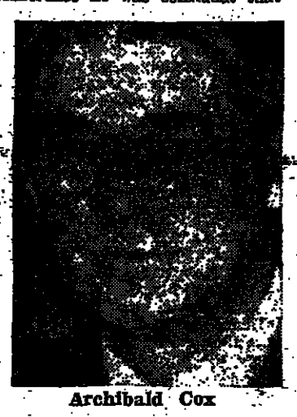
Power of Removal

Nonetheless, Mr. Richardson said he would "retain ultimate power of removal" over the special prosecutor.

Mr. Richardson said the job offer to Prof. Cox was extended on Wednesday and accepted early this afternoon.

Prof. Cox served as solicitor general from 1961 to 1965. He was 61 yesterday. He returned to Harvard as Wilston professor of law after his four-year stint in the Justice Department. He had taught at Harvard from 1945 to 1961 after service in the Justice and Labor Departments during World War II.

Prof. Cox was described as a Democrat. Some key members of the committee are known to have urged Mr. Richardson to name a Democrat to handle the investigation and prosecution of the Watergate affair and related cases.



Archibald Cox

In Boston, Mr. Cox said he had accepted the job with the provision that he be given independence in conducting the investigation. He also said that the probe could last "a year, 18 months or more."

"This is a task of tremendous importance," he said. "Somehow we must restore confidence, honor and integrity in government."

Mr. Cox said that he had dis-

Brezhnev, Brandt Meet to End Long 'History Full of Sorrow'

2 Leaders Open 4-Day Conference

By Craig R. Whitney

BONN, May 18 (NYT).—West Germany and the Soviet Union today took a historic step in overcoming what Chancellor Willy Brandt called "a history full of sorrows" as the Soviet Communist party leader, Leonid I Brezhnev, arrived in Bonn for four days of talks on East-West as well as bilateral issues.

Both men were obviously moved by the significance of Mr. Brezhnev's arrival at the Cologne-Bonn airport this morning from Moscow on the first trip ever made by a Soviet leader to West Germany.

Within the last week, Mr. Brezhnev has been in both of the two German states that rose in the tensions of the cold war out of the rubble of the Third Reich, destroyed in 1945 by the armies of the Soviet Union and the Western Allies. Last weekend, he visited Berlin, capital of the Communist German Democratic Republic.

But the occasion has been characterized by both sides as a "working visit," as well as a symbol of European détente. After a seven-course meal, the two leaders settled down for 2 1/2 hours of talks in the Petersberg Hotel, on a hilltop overlooking the east bank of the Rhine.

5 Parallel Talks

Five other parallel sets of talks —led by discussions between the two foreign ministers, Andrei A. Gromyko and Walter Scheel, and the two leaders' foreign policy advisers—went on at the same time.

All were described by Soviet and German press spokesmen later as efforts to elaborate and build on the fundamental treaty of August, 1970, in which the Russians and the West Germans led by Mr. Brandt agreed in effect to call off the cold war that had frozen previous relations between them.

The Soviet spokesman, who came with Mr. Brezhnev, Leonid Zamyatin, said after the talks that Mr. Brandt and the Soviet leader probably would sign a new agreement on long-term cooperation in economic, technical and industrial matters tomorrow morning, when two other relatively minor accords are scheduled to be signed by lesser dignitaries.

He left the possibility of a further big trade deal between the Soviet Union and the Federal Republic open. "Let's sign the first three and then see what else happens," he said.

Opinions Exchanged

The two leaders and their foreign policy advisers also exchanged opinions on both the ongoing Mutual Balanced Force Reduction talks in Vienna and the forthcoming Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in Helsinki. They will continue to talk about these negotiations in the next three days, according to their spokesmen.

Although Mr. Brezhnev said he wanted to come here to "see and hear" for himself what West Germany is like, as well as to negotiate, he is spending most of his first three days in talks and negotiations. His hilltop hotel suite is thoroughly isolated from Bonn and its people, protected as he is by 6,000 policemen, equivalent to half an army division. Last weekend, in East Berlin, he drove through the center of that Communist capital in an open limousine and shook hands in the press of the crowd.

This morning, after he and Mr. Brandt, somewhat unceremoniously got through the obligatory honor guard review—when they finished, they beckoned urgently for interpreters and aides to tell them what to do next, cutting short the march music—they were spirited off in a motorcade along the 20 miles down the Rhine to the Petersberg. But there was no flag-bedecked pa-

Some of Better Specimens at Zoo In Moscow on Wrong Side of Bars

MOSCOW, May 18 (Reuters).—The tiger at the Moscow zoo is taking sleeping tablets, the lion is flicking ash out of his mane and the bear is sleeping off his hangover—all because visitors to the zoo won't do what they are told.

The youth newspaper Moskovsky Komsomolets has catalogued the insults suffered by the zoo's inmates.

One of the worst psychological casualties was the tiger. Parents tried to please their children by making him roar. They hit him on the shins, poked him in the ribs and patted him on the nose.

The animal's nerves went to pieces and after the zoo had closed for the day a specialist was called in to cuddle him and give him a sedative.

Then there was the day last year when two drunks looking for a companion to share their bottle found their way to the bear's cage. The bear enjoyed the wine very much, but became drunk and was ill for some time, the newspaper said.

The zoo's lion is now closely guarded—ever since two youths set him alight by flicking burning cigarettes on his mane.

Visitors also ignored the "Don't feed the animals" signs and fed cabbage to the wolves, ice cream to the penguins and orange peel to the seals.

The newspaper urged that voluntary zoo helpers should be drafted to keep a closer watch—not on the animals but on the visitors.

8 Killed in Ulster Violence, Highest Toll in Nine Months

From Wire Dispatches

BELFAST, May 18.—Eight persons were killed last night and today in the worst upsurge of violence in Northern Ireland in nine months.

The dead in bombings and shootings were four British soldiers, three civilian men and a 14-year-old girl.

The explosion of a car bomb killed the four British soldiers—the greatest number of troops killed in a single incident since the start of fighting among Northern Irish Protestants, Catholics and British forces in August, 1969. The army said today that revised figures showed 797 deaths since then—119 of them since Jan. 1.

The soldiers—three of them married, one with a year-old daughter—were leaving a dance in Omagh, 60 miles west of Belfast. As they approached their car in a crowded car park "it just erupted in a sheet of flame," an army spokesman said.

A fifth soldier was seriously injured.

"This was a very crowded car park," an Omagh police spokesman said. "If the people had come out of the dance five minutes earlier, the blast could have killed 40 or 50 people."

'Absolute Carnage'

"The scene was one of absolute carnage," a senior police officer said. "I have never seen anything quite like it."

In Belfast, 14-year-old Eileen Mackin died of bullet wounds in the stomach. She was hit by shots fired at a British Army patrol. Another 15-year-old girl was wounded, the army said.

Thomas Ward, a 30-year-old Catholic, was playing darts in his favorite pub when gunmen killed him with three shots in the head.

Near the Irish border, 22-year-old Michael Leonard was killed by a single police bullet. Police said it was fired when he refused orders to halt.

An army marksman killed a would-be sniper in the Catholic Old Park area today, the army said. A marksman in a schoolground observation post spotted a sniper about to fire and killed him with one shot, the army said. It said the man's body and his rifle were recovered.

Gunmen Wounded

In other Belfast violence today, an off-duty militiaman of the Ulster Defense Regiment opened fire on two gunmen who tried to hijack his car in the Protestant Shankill Road and seriously wounded one, police said. The other fled.

A gunman shot and seriously wounded another man as he waited at a street corner for a bus, police said.

Security sources expressed concern that two bombs planted in the Belfast railroad station today marked an Irish Republican Army campaign against transportation centers. Yesterday, two bombs slightly damaged a runway in the first attack on Aldergrove Airport, the main one in Northern Ireland.

British airline pilots met today to decide whether to ban Belfast flights as a result. British European Airways chairman Phillip Lawton came to Belfast to check security precautions at the airport.

An army spokesman said the IRA offensive, begun Wednesday in advance of local elections, obviously was being pushed hard.

An IRA statement early this week vowed to kill 20 British troops in six weeks, before the June 28 elections for a new Northern Ireland provincial parliament.

N.Y. Spring Snowstorm

UTICA, N.Y., May 18 (AP).—A spring snowfall toppled trees and power lines in central New York overnight. Roads were blocked and several schools were forced to close. Six inches of snow were reported in Oneonta, Boonville and Bainbridge, which are nearly 100 miles apart.

Two former Nixon cabinet members were also named in that indictment handed down May 10.

Two of the Swiss warrants are for Mr. Vesco's business associates and three are for IOS aides of Bernard Cornfeld, who lost control of the mutual-fund organization to Mr. Vesco in 1970.

The warrants, valid only for Switzerland, were all issued last February by Examining Magistrate Pierre-Christian Weber along with the one that led to the arrest and jailing here on Monday of Mr. Cornfeld, IOS founder, on charges of fraud.

The Vesco aides are Milton F. Meissner, also an American, and Ulrich Strickler, a Swiss. The two men were members of the group that took over IOS, Ltd., from Mr. Vesco in a sale announced by the financier in April, 1972.

James Roosevelt Named

Mr. Cornfeld's former IOS associates named in the arrest warrants are James Roosevelt, son of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, C. Henry Buhl 3d and Edward M. Cowett.

Magistrate Weber is in charge of the investigation under way here into the complicated IOS dealings. It was sparked by fraud complaints by former Swiss employees of IOS who paid $10 for IOS shares now said to be worth 10 cents, and complaints by Swiss investors in an IOS mutual fund that lost half its value overnight.

Lawyers who have been involved in IOS affairs here said that they had learned of the newly disclosed warrants only as a result of the arrest of Mr. Cornfeld. Mr. Weber could not be reached for comment.

A person may be detained for questioning only 24 hours under an arrest warrant. If the examining magistrate wishes to prolong the detention he must prefer charges and ask a court to remand the accused in custody.

Mr. Cornfeld, 45, was bound over yesterday at a preliminary court hearing on counts of fraud and incitement to speculation.

Confrontation Embarrasses London, Reykjavik

Britain Sends 3d Frigate to 'Cod War' Zone

By Alvin Shuster

LONDON, May 18 (NYT).—A revolt by the captains of British trawlers fishing in disputed waters near Iceland has embarrassed London, emboldened Icelanders and brought both sides somewhat closer to a showdown on the high seas.

Neither country, partners in NATO, is longing for any increased tension over the controversy arising out of Iceland's decision to prohibit all foreign fishing within 50 miles of its shores. But the decision by the skippers yesterday to abandon the Icelandic fishing grounds has added some new complications.

The British government, which is disputing Iceland's decision last September to extend the 12-mile limit to 50 miles, wants the trawlers back in the area to bolster its case and to avoid the appearance of "surrender." And to persuade them to return, London had to talk a little tougher today than it would like.

Ready to Go In

"Any serious harassment by Icelandic gunboats of the type experienced recently and the navy will, after consultation, be ready to 'go in,'" said Joseph Godber, minister of agriculture, fisheries and food. The Foreign Office echoed the sentiments in a statement, noting that "the government has a duty to protect British fishermen."

The result was that some of the 40 trawlers that pulled out yesterday started to return today. The Ministry of Defense sent a third frigate to patrol outside the 50-mile limit and Royal Navy helicopters began flying over the controversial waters to boost the morale of any returning trawlermen.

[The British Trawler Federation today issued a statement saying, "There are about 18 trawlers fishing just outside the 50-mile limit in the northeast area of Iceland and another five just inside," Associated Press reported.

["About 17 other trawlers, which had been fishing the Icelandic grounds, are now on their way to other grounds off Bear Island, the White Sea, Norway and the Faroes," the statement said.]

At issue in the skippers' "revolt" is the failure of the British government to use the navy within the 50-mile area to protect the trawlers faced with occasional harassment by the gunboats of Iceland's tiny navy.

The captains, declaring, "We want the British navy," charged that the gunboats fired more live rounds this week and even tried to send men aboard one trawler.

The British, fearful of appearing to the world as "bullies" in the dispute with a nation of 200,000, have deliberately kept frigates from the scene of potential trouble. Britain feels that shots fired between British and Icelandic boats would represent acts of far greater political and diplomatic significance than the fishing dispute itself.

The so-called "cod war" is an emotional and serious issue in both London and Reykjavik, Iceland, angry at the presence of British and West German trawlers within the 50-mile area, argues that nothing less than its survival is at stake. It notes that fish and fish products make up more than 80 percent of its exports and that cod and haddock are disappearing too fast from its waters.

Britain argues that the new limit presents a threat because about 25 percent of the fish consumed by Britons comes from the waters off Iceland. British officials also charge that Iceland is ignoring the International Court of Justice, which asked Reykjavik to hold off enforcement of the new claim pending a final decision on the merits of the case.

French Air Controllers Call Strike Resumption on Friday

PARIS, May 18 (UPI).—Civil air traffic controllers announced today they would resume the strike action that virtually isolated France by air in March.

A union representative said the strike would resume May 25. There was no immediate word from the government if military controllers would be called in once again to replace the strikers.

The strike action started in February when the majority of the civil controllers, who guide planes in and out of airports, stopped work to protest their status as government functionaries, which, they said, limits salaries.

The strike, which lasted a month, caused more than 30 airlines to cancel services to France and left travelers stranded for days in airports.

The union representative said the controllers called the new strike because "we were promised wage negotiations by the government but there has been nothing." He said the strike would have more impact this time because it will take place during the tourist season.

During the first strike, two airliners collided on March 5 above France's Atlantic coast. Sixty-eight passengers were killed. Striking air controllers said that military controllers, who had replaced them a few days before, were to blame for the crash.

Several airlines refused to resume flights over France as long as the military controllers were in charge.

The civil controllers returned to work March 21 after a 28-day walkout that cost airlines, especially Air France, tens of millions of dollars.

The strikers also asked for the right to strike, which their status as state employees prohibits.

Guerrilla Unit From Syria Quits Lebanon

New Effort to Form Government Seen

BEIRUT, May 18 (AP).—The Palestine Liberation Army's 5,000-man Yarmouk Brigade, which entered Lebanon at the height of army-guerrilla fighting last week, withdrew into Syria today as a secret co-existence agreement between the two sides went into effect.

The army command said the withdrawal of the brigade's men, tanks and armored cars was completed at dawn, a few hours after the new accord was announced.

Guerrillas who had accompanied the brigade also withdrew from positions around the eastern fortress town of Rachaya, scene of heavy fighting in the first week of the confrontation.

With the three-week-old guerrilla crisis resolved, apparently on his terms, President Suleiman Franjieh turned his attention to the uncertain domestic political scene.

Political sources said it was essential that there be a government soon because the army-guerrilla agreement establishes a joint committee to oversee it and many observers believe the interior minister will head the body.

Mr. Franjieh still has not accepted the resignation of Premier Amin Hafez, who quit office May 8 when new fighting erupted between the army and the guerrillas and a state of emergency was proclaimed.

A dusk-to-dawn curfew remains in effect in Beirut, its suburbs and five other cities, but Beirut radio said the situation would return to normal by the middle of next week.

No details of the agreement that the army reached with the guerrillas after three days of negotiations were made public.

But official sources asserted that the guerrillas had accepted all of the Lebanese government's demands.

Although the guerrilla leadership appealed to "all its fighters" to abide by the accord, it remained uncertain whether the militant radicals, whose flouting of Lebanese sovereignty has caused the fighting, would fall in line and obey the leadership.

Argentina to Lift Martial Law as Terrorism Eases

BUENOS AIRES, May 18 (NYT).—The military government has decided to lift martial law that has been in effect in most of Argentina since May 1, after Trotskyite guerrillas assassinated a former chief of staff of the armed forces.

Military spokesmen announced that the emergency measures would be withdrawn on Saturday in the capital and the provinces of Buenos Aires, Cordoba and Santa Fe. Martial law was lifted last week in two other populous provinces.

The announcement follows two weeks of calm during which Trotskyite guerrillas—who are at odds with both the military régime and the Peronist government-elect—have suspended their activities.

During that period, President-elect Hector J. Camopra has embarked on major political initiatives to widen his base of support and reach a consensus with almost all important national groups before his inauguration on May 25.

By gaining vocal and written support from such disparate groups as organized labor, business, agricultural groups, opposition parties and the Catholic Church, Mr. Campora apparently has defused any threat of a military coup against his government-elect before its inauguration.

Big Soviet-Made Guns Pound Hué Defenses, Saigon Reports

From Wire Dispatches

SAIGON, May 18—Communist gunners shelled the defense line of Hué with Soviet-made 130-mm cannons today for the first time since the Vietnam cease-fire pact went into effect in January, the Saigon command said.

The 130-mm rounds were part of a barrage of more than 600 artillery and mortar shells fired from dawn until 9 a.m. against government positions within eight miles of Hué, the command said.

The 130-mm guns, the largest in the Communist arsenal with a range of 17 miles, were the key artillery weapon in the North Vietnamese conquest last year of Quang Tri City, 32 miles north of Hué, the command said.

Polish Brig. Gen. Marian Ryba, of the International Commission of Control and Supervision, today authorized an ICCS regional team to investigate alleged American bombing of Communist territory in South Vietnam, commission sources said.

"We have been after him not to procrastinate," a non-Communist source in the ICCS said. He added that U.S. bombing "has been taken for granted and proof will not add too much. But if we go and find nothing to substantiate the charges, it would be disastrous [for the Viet Cong]."

In Cambodia, six tankers and an ammunition barge arrived in Phnom Penh with badly needed supplies after running a gauntlet of Communist rocket and cannon fire along the Mekong River.

The Hong Kong freighter Ever Success was abandoned 17 miles down river after it was set ablaze by gunfire from the shore. Cambodian patrol boats picked up the crew, and no casualties were reported.

Another ship in the convoy, the tanker Vira 2, was set afire, but the crew put out the flames and got the ship to the Cambodian capital.

U.S. fighter-bombers and helicopter gunships pounded the river bank ahead of the convoy during the last stretch of its 60-mile passage from the South Vietnamese border to Phnom Penh.

It was the seventh convoy to reach the capital in two months.

The Cambodian military command said that Communist harassment of government outposts continued but few casualties were reported.

A team of eight Americans outside of Hanoi today examined 21 graves where North Vietnamese officials say most of the Americans who died in captivity in the North were buried, the U.S. Embassy in Saigon announced.

The 21 graves in the Bac Huyen cemetery 25 miles north of Hanoi were marked by small tombstones bearing invented Vietnamese names above American initials, the embassy aide said. U.S. officials said they understood that American names were not written in full to prevent desecration by anti-American Vietnamese.

The U.S. team found the grave of an American whose name was not on the original Hanoi list identifying 23 U.S. servicemen who died in captivity in North Vietnam, the embassy said tonight.

Tiger-Cage Warden Back

SAIGON, May 18 (Reuters).—Col. Nguyen Van Ve, replaced as director of South Vietnam's Con Son Island prison in 1971 after an international controversy over "tiger-cage" punishment cells, has been reappointed to the post, government officials said today.

Asked about an Amnesty International report from London on the re-appointment, the officials said: "Col. Ve returned as director of the Con Son correctional institution in June, 1972, in a routine Interior Ministry appointment."

They said that Col. Ve, who was assigned to a military police unit in Saigon after the tiger-cage controversy flared, had been replaced at the island prison in early 1971 "to ease public opinion."

Kissinger, Tho Meet Again; Plan More Sessions

PARIS, May 18 (IHT).—Henry A. Kissinger met for the second straight day today with North Vietnamese negotiator Le Duc Tho. A North Vietnamese spokesman said after the meeting that the talks would go on for "three or four more days."

The two delegations are meeting to implement the Jan. 27 Vietnam peace agreement, which each side accuses the other of violating.

Nguyen Co Thach, Mr. Tho's deputy, said following today's nearly four-hour meeting that it was "still too early to say whether there is any progress." He said the two envoys had agreed to meet again tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Kissinger had no comment today either coming or going from the Communist-owned villa in Gif-sur-Yvette. Yesterday, the two sides met in an American-owned villa in Saint-Nom-la-Bretèche, where they will meet again tomorrow.

Mr. Thach said that the two sides were reviewing all the problems arising out of the peace agreement. As yesterday, there was considerable smiling and handshaking when the delegates arrived at and left the villa.

Expert Quits CIA on Policy In Cambodia

Attacks Distortions On Role of Rebels

By Bernard Gwertzman

WASHINGTON, May 18 (NYT).—An expert on Indochina resigned from the CIA yesterday, charging the U.S. intelligence community with "grossly" underestimating the size of the insurgency in Cambodia and with refusing to admit that the conflict there was a civil war.

Samuel A. Adams, in a resignation statement to the CIA that he gave to The New York Times, too, also said that the intelligence community was "neither honest enough nor thorough enough" in its work on Indochina.

Mr. Adams's views were disputed by experts in both the State Department and the CIA, who stuck with the official analysis, shared by the Pentagon, that the insurgent force of 40,000 to 50,000 men is almost totally dependent on North Vietnam and responsive to Hanoi's will.

In an interview, Mr. Adams took direct issue with the official view of both the size and content of the rebel force.

He said that the Cambodian insurgents were "virtually independent" of Hanoi and that they numbered 200,000, of whom as many as 100,000 were organized into regular units. He also said there were "no more than 2,000 North Vietnamese with the insurgents, specialists in such work as mine-laying and engineering."

Behind Fund Dispute

The size and content of the rebel force are issues that underlie congressional efforts to cut off funds for the continued American bombing of Cambodia in support of the Lon Nol government. The administration had defended the raids as necessary to offset the North Vietnamese involvement in Cambodia.

Moreover, the administration has also tended to describe the Cambodian insurgents as a poorly organized force that could be handled by the Lon Nol forces of 200,000 men if it were not for North Vietnam's aid.

The CIA refused to comment on Mr. Adams's resignation.

Mr. Adams, a 10-year veteran of the agency, also was involved in a dispute in 1967 over the size of the Viet Cong force in South Vietnam.

He insisted that it was 600,000, while the official estimate was 275,000. He said that his figure was accepted as the accurate one in 1968 after the Tet offensive.

"Failures in research have led to repeated misjudgments of the nature and strength of our adversaries" in Indochina, he said.

rade route and no cheering crowds as in Berlin.

Mr. Brezhnev said in a speech at a state dinner given in his honor at the chancellor's office after the day's talks today, "the work of renewing relations between our lands has—with a certain logic—been taken over by members of a generation that lived through the horrors of the last war. I who spent all the war years on the front am especially aware of the meaning and the significance of this work."

Mr. Brandt, in his speech, said: "Neither of us can forget where the other stands," he said. "The Federal Republic of Germany is a member of the Atlantic alliance. She is embedded in the community of West European states that has alredy become something more than a Common Market. Be assured: this community does not consider itself as a bloc erected against others but as a union that can serve the organization of peace as well as the common good of the people."

Mr. Brezhnev will be going to Washington on June 18 for a week of talks with President Nixon, a similar "working summit." Many of the multilateral issues discussed in Bonn, of course, concern the United States as well as Mr. Brandt's European partners.

The Brandt-Brezhnev talks will continue tomorrow and Sunday. On Monday, Mr. Brezhnev is tentatively scheduled to visit the Ruhr industrial city of Dortmund, site of a Soviet cultural exhibition.

UN Defers Vote On 2 Resolutions Against Rhodesia

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., May 18 (Reuters). — The Security Council tonight deferred a vote at least until Tuesday on two resolutions on the Rhodesian question after it became known that Britain and possibly also the United States would use their vetos.

Joseph Odero-Jowi, of Kenya, asked for the postponement after the council had suspended its meeting for almost an hour for private consultations.

He said that important principles were at stake and sponsors of the proposals—to strengthen and broaden the sanctions in effect against Rhodesia since 1966—wanted to prepare themselves to meet the "challenge of the veto."

One of the resolutions would approve measures previously agreed to by all 15 members of the council's Sanctions Committee. But it also includes such steps as calling on states to bar their insurance companies from covering air flights or maritime cargoes to or from Rhodesia.

The second African resolution, consists entirely of proposals which the Sanctions Committee has been unable to agree upon.

Cyprus Mediation By Greek Church

ATHENS, May 18 (UPI).—The Holy Synod of the Church of Greece will send three Greek prelates to mediate the dispute between President Makarios of Cyprus and a three-member synod which said it has unfrocked him, a spokesman for the Archdiocese of Greece said today.

Archbishop Makarios has invited Greek Orthodox churches and patriarchates to send representatives to a major synod on Cyprus later this year to examine the case of the three senior bishops of Cyprus, who two months ago decided to unfrock him because he failed to resign his political post.

The archbishop did not accept the decision, which he said was made illegally.

McCord Testifies He Was Told Of a Nixon Clemency Offer

it—that there was mounting pressure in this area.

Mr. Caulfield was instrumental in getting McCord his job as security chief for the Committee for the Re-Election of the President in the fall of 1971.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D. N.C., chairman of the Watergate committee, which is formally known as the Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, cautioned McCord about hearsay twice. One caution came during McCord's references to the Caulfield conversations and the other when he mentioned planning sessions involving former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, Jeb Stuart Magruder, a former White House aide who headed the Nixon campaign staff for a period, and Mr. Dean. McCord said fellow conspirators G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt jr. had told him about the planning sessions.

"The testimony of Mr. McCord as to what was told him by John Caulfield would not be accepted in a court of law, to connect the President with what Mr. Caulfield was doing," Sen. Ervin said.

"But it is admissible to show whether or not Mr. Caulfield is a party to any agreement to attempt to suppress information about what is popularly known about the Watergate affair at this stage," he said.

"Now what makes you think that either Mr. Caulfield or Mr. Hunt had authority to offer executive clemency to you?" a senator asked McCord.

'Conveying a Message'

"Mr. Caulfield, because he had told me that he was conveying a message from the very top level of the White House," McCord replied.

"You assumed when he said top level, that meant the President of the United States?"

McCord: "I assumed it meant one of three people, sir."

"All right, name them."

"Mr. Haldeman, Mr. Ehrlichman or the President," McCord replied, referring to H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, two top White House aides who resigned April 30.

McCord's testimony also included allegations that—according to Liddy—the bugging at the Watergate was planned and approved by Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Dean and Mr. Magruder.

McCord said he and seven Cuban-Americans planted a telephone wiretap and an eavesdropping device in Democratic headquarters in the Watergate on May 27, and that Mr. Mitchell was so pleased with the results that he ordered a second raid, which resulted in the June 17 arrests.

Of the Republicans' overall political intelligence plan, McCord said he "concluded that he [Mr. Mitchell] took it to higher authority and got the approval from his superior."

McCord said he would not have entered into the Watergate break-in conspiracy had he not believed it was approved by Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Dean.

He said he assumed Mr. Mitchell had the President's approval for the Watergate operation because Mr. Mitchell, "a very decisive man," had delayed 20 days before approving the bugging.

"I drew the conclusion that the attorney general had conveyed this decision to his superior," McCord said. Mr. Mitchell was answerable only to the President.

Did McCord have any evidence that Mr. Nixon actually knew of the plan?

"The evidence that the counsel to the President sat in," McCord said.

Later, Sen. Herman Talmadge, D., Ga., asked: "Did you ever have conversations with Mr. Mitchell himself about the operation?"

"About the Watergate operation itself, no sir," McCord said.

"You called him Mr. Attorney General?"

"Yes."

"What did he call you?"

"Before or after June 17?" McCord replied.

The room erupted in laughter.

June 17 was the date McCord and four others were arrested inside the Democratic party headquarters.

McCord said Mr. Caulfield also conveyed a veiled threat at their last meeting on Jan. 35.

Reading from a prepared statement "for accuracy's purpose," McCord said he was told by Mr. Caulfield:

"'You know that if the administration gets its back to the wall, it will have to take steps to defend itself.'

"I took that as a personal threat and I told him in response that I had had a good life, that my will was made out and that I had thought through the risks and would take them when I was ready.

"He said that if I had to go off to jail that the administration would help with the bail premiums. I advised him that it was not a bail premium, but $100,000 straight cash and that was a problem I would have to worry about, through family and friends.

"On the night before sentencing, Jack called me and said that the administration would provide the $100,000 in cash if I could tell him how to get it funded through an intermediary. I said that if we ever needed it I would let him know. I never contacted him thereafter; neither have I heard from him."

McCord said he and Liddy, both officials of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President, were the only two of the seven defendants indicted in the Watergate break-in who stood trial. The other five pleaded guilty, denying that guilty pleas and silence had been bought or brought on by pressure.

Letter From McCord

McCord was the first of a number of key witnesses scheduled to appear before the Senate inquiry. It was his letter, charging political pressure, perjury and involvement of others, that broke open the cover-up phase of the affair.

Since the March 19 letter to Chief U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, who will sentence McCord and five others June 15, at least a dozen administration officials have resigned or were fired.

McCord, who spent 19 years as a CIA agent and three with the FBI, was asked why after a lifetime of work in law enforcement he agreed to help Liddy "in his program of burglaries and illegal wiretapping."

McCord said: "The attorney general himself . . . at his office had considered and approved the operation, according to Mr. Liddy. . . . The counsel for the President [Mr. Dean] had participated in those decisions with him.

"One was the top legal officer for the United States at the Department of Justice and the second gentleman the top legal officer in the White House."

"Would you have acted any differently with regard to this plan if you believed that Mr. Liddy was masterminding these plans on his own?"

"Yes I would," McCord said.

"And what would you have done?"

'Highly Significant'

". . . I would not have participated. I have a personal opinion that some others would not have participated, but that may not be relevant to your question . . . I would say that the decision made to participate was not one made immediately but only after I saw that the gentlemen involved had given careful consideration to this operation over a period of time including a 30-day waiting period which to me was highly significant."

CIA Official Says Gray Urg Dismissal of Bugging Figu

By Marjorie Hunter

WASHINGTON, May 18 (NYT).—The deputy director of the CIA says that L. Patrick Gray 3d, then acting director of the FBI, told him almost a year ago that he had recommended that all those involved in the Watergate affair be discharged.

Lt. Gen. Vernon Walters also quoted Mr. Gray as having told him that he was "prepared to resign" over apparent White House efforts to implicate the CIA and the FBI in covering up the Watergate operation.

The previously undisclosed points were made in a sworn affidavit presented to several congressional committees this week by Gen. Walters but made public only yesterday.

In his affidavit, Gen. Walters did not say to whom Mr. Gray asserted he had recommended the dismissal of those involved in the Watergate break-in of just a few weeks earlier.

Dismissal Recommended

The break-in at Democratic headquarters occurred on June 17 of last year. Gen. Walters said that Mr. Gray told him on July 12 that he had recommended the dismissal of those responsible.

Mr. Gray testified here yesterday before a federal grand jury investigating the Watergate affair. However, he was not available for comment on matters raised by Gen. Walters.

Mr. Gray resigned April 27 of this year as FBI acting director after disclosures that he had destroyed documents obtained from a key conspirator in the Watergate scandal after receiving them at a meeting with two ranking White House officials, John D. Ehrlichman and John W. Dean 3d.

Gen. Walters appeared again yesterday at a closed hearing of the Senate Armed Services Committee, along with Richard M. Helms, former CIA director and now ambassador to Iran.

Later, as he left the hearing room, Gen. Walters declined to discuss his earlier affidavit. Mr. Helms, too, declined comment.

President's Position

Sen. Stuart Symington, D., Mo., acting chairman of the committee, said that all CIA witnesses who appeared before his panel in the last week had "stated that they did not know whether the President" knew about White House efforts to involve the agency in the apparent cover-up of the Watergate affair.

"But it's hard for me to visualize that the President knew nothing about this," Sen. Symington said.

Reports of White House attempts to involve the CIA and the FBI in covering up the Watergate affair were detailed in Gen. Walters's statement, as well as in the committee summary released earlier this week.

Gen. Walters told how he and Mr. Helms had been called to the White House on June 23 of last year by Mr. Ehrlichman and H.R. Haldeman, who was at that time the President's chief of staff.

"As I recall it," Gen. Walters said, "Mr. Haldeman said that the Watergate incident was causing trouble and was being exploited by the opposition."

The general said that Mr. Haldeman had asked him to go to Mr. Gray and deman the FBI investigation into Nixon re-election campaign "laundered" through a City bank be called off grounds that "further i into the Mexican aspects matter might jeopardize the CIA's covert activi that area."

The general said that done as he was told, b later he found that the vestigation would not je CIA interests in Mexico informed Mr. Dean at th House.

Gen. Walters indicate the White House had o to press both the CIA FBI in the matter.

present and future Swiss claimants. But they are understood to doubt that the financier will be granted bail even if the plaintiffs withdraw from the case.

The attorney general's office, legal sources say, is determined to bring the financier to trial. It is said to be mindful of the unfavorable comment provoked by the dropping last year of charges against Mr. Vesco, Mr. Meissner and Mr. Strickler.

Arrested in 1971

The three associates were arrested in November, 1971, and placed in the jail where Mr. Cornfeld is now held, because of a complaint alleging misconduct as officers of an IOS-owned Geneva bank.

They were released on bail after 24 hours and the charges against them subsequently were withdrawn when an out-of-court settlement was reached with the plaintiff.

Mr. Vesco, 37, moved his operational base from the United States while the SEC and the federal grand jury in New York were investigating his affairs. He reportedly has established his new headquarters in Costa Rica.

The grand jury indicted him and Harry L. Sears, a New Jersey Republican leader who led President Nixon's re-election effort in that state last year, on charges of conspiracy and obstruction of justice. It indicted on the same day former U.S. Attorney General John N. Mitchell and former U.S. Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans on charges of conspiracy to defraud the United States, obstructing justice and making false statements to a grand jury. The indictment said that in return for the unreported $200,000 gift, Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Stans sought to influence the SEC probe of Vesco business dealings.

He said the subcommittee plans to take an overall look at the sales, rather than concentrate on certain aspects as the other reports are doing.

Mr. Feldman said he expects the subcommittee, which is chaired by Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D., Wash., to start hearings on the grain sales in about a month.

The sale last summer has been severely criticized by several congressmen. Most criticism centers on the prices that farmers received for their grain. Many farmers sold when wheat was in the $1.68-$1.70 range, only to see the price skyrocket to around $2.40 a bushel in September.

Some congressmen have contended that farmers would have held on to their wheat and received a better price if the Agriculture Department had required exporters to tell it how much grain was to be sold overseas.

Under current law, exporters do not have to tell the Agriculture Department of sales. Information on the Russian sales, for example, came only when exporters began applying for export subsidies on wheat.

Sales to China Seen

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP). —State Department officials say China may seek to buy more than $200 million in U.S. agricultural products this year—mainly grain and cotton.

Export figures for the first quarter of 1973, however, do not reflect this level. As of March 31, $88 million worth of exports had been sent to China and officials said the figures for cotton alone should have reflected sales of about $100 million.

There have been reports that the Chinese already have bought more than 600,000 bales of cotton this year. In Dallas, there are reports that sales will exceed 750,000 bales, while other trade rumors put the total figure at 1 million bales. But sales frequently are disguised and not reported directly to the government, passing instead through third parties.

Mr. Patterson said: "Even if the President were here himself, he can't change an act of Congress."

The meeting was a fulfillment of one of the provisions of the agreement signed May 6 that ended the 71-day occupation of Wounded Knee by the American Indian Movement.

For almost an hour, the chiefs prayed and Mr. Fools Crow delivered a long speech in Sioux ending with a question that was translated by Mathew King, his aide.

"This is my country," Mr. Fools Crow, who can speak and write English, asserted in Sioux. "I want to ask a simple question. Can the 1868 treaty be reinstated? I want a simple yes or no."

Mr. Patterson read the letter from Mr. Garment that said that the negotiators had no power, but "they come to listen to your views." He also stressed that the headsmen take their case to the subcommittee on Indian Affairs which will soon open hearings on the Wounded Knee take-over.

At the end of the speech, Vern Long, the head of the civil-rights organization at the reservation and a supporter of the Indian movement, said bitterly: "For 100 years. Listen. Listen. Promises. Promises. You go back and what do we get?"

Swiss Are Voting On Plan to Drop Curbs on Jesuits

BERN, May 18 (AP).—Swiss voters will decide Sunday whether the 81 Jesuit priests working in this country should continue to be regarded as potential enemies of the state.

In a referendum, they are to vote on a government proposal to annul a 125-year-old article of the constitution restricting the activities of the order in Switzerland.

The Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches, all major parties and the press have been urging the elimination of the article, which also forbids the opening of new convents.

But opponents have mounted a highly emotional campaign, warning that removing the curbs on the Jesuit order could create a "second Northern Ireland."

The militancy of the anti-Jesuit movement has come as a surprise to official circles in Switzerland, where Catholics gained a majority only in recent years. They had been outnumbered by Protestants for centuries after the Reformation.

Most of the 81 Jesuits active here work quietly as pastors among students and workers under a liberal interpretation of the law.

POSSIBLE SHADES—Two schematic drawings illustrate two approaches Skylab astronauts will be prepared to use when they rendezvous with the orbiting laboratory. The sunshade method (top) would call for an astronaut to leave the hatch of the docked command module to stretch a sunshade over the critical workshop area. The sun sail method (bottom) would call for astronauts, while orbiting parallel with Skylab, to actually rig-up a sail to three distinct points on the craft.

Space Station Repair Mission Is Simulated by Astronauts

CAPE KENNEDY, May 18 (AP).—Astronauts, preparing for the first space salvage mission, today practiced installing a 400-square-foot sunshade which they hope will cool off the Skylab station enough to allow a manned mission.

Skylab-1 astronauts, Capt. Charles Conrad jr., Lt. Comdr. Joseph P. Kerwin and Comdr. Paul J. Weitz are scheduled to be launched to the space station at 9:02 a.m. EDT May 25. They'll carry with them two types of solar shades designed to protect the 118-foot Sylab from the blistering heat of the sun.

Capt. Conrad and Comdr. Kerwin today "flew" an Apollo command ship simulator at the Johnson Space Center near Houston, learning how to guide the space ship close enough to the Skylab to allow Comdr. Weitz to attach a sail-shaped sun shade.

In another building at the space center, Comdr. Weitz schooled himself in the mechanical techniques he'll use to deploy the shade. If it proves possible, the astronaut will stand in the Apollo command ship hatch, lean out and attach the sail-like shade on Skylab while Capt. Conrad and Comdr. Kerwin hold the Apollo craft steady alongside the space station.

Temperatures Stable

Temperatures in Skylab remained stable today at 100 to 110 degrees, some 30 to 40 degrees hotter than the preferred level. Skylab heated up shortly after its launch last Monday when an aluminum meteorite and thermal shield ripped away. The shield also fouled deployment of two of six power-producing solar panels, cutting the space station's electrical power by half.

Engineers in the nation's widespread centers of space technology were fabricating three types of sunshades and a variety of tools for the repair mission.

In addition to the sail-shaped shade, engineers continued to study two other types of solar shields, one of which will probably be carried aboard Skylab-1. One of these is shaped like a roller-type of window shade and the other resembles an umbrella. Both would be installed by Comdr. Kerwin in a space walk from the hatch of Skylab.

A decision on which of the shades to use is expected next week, but officials said the mission plans now call for the sail-type of shield to be the primary "fix" and the windoow-shade device to be the back-up.

Engineers are also fabricating a shepherd's crook device which Comdr. Weitz will use in an attempt to unjam the broken set of solar power panels. Officials hoped that the astronaut, leaning out of the Apollo hatch, could force the panels to spring into position by tugging on them with the crook.

Tentative plans for the mission called for the astronauts to spend about seven hours in rendez vous maneuvers after launch Friday. They will then fly around Skylab, inspecting the trouble areas. Capt. Conrad will decide then whether or not to attempt the sail-shield installation.

Mission plans after that will depend upon success of the patch job, but officials said the astronauts will be prepared to live aboard the command ship for up to five days, waiting for the space station to cool off.

Officials said that if the repair work succeeds, the astronauts will proceed with a long-term mission aboard Skylab for a total of 28 days in orbit.

There also were hopes that the Skylab-2 and Skylab-3 crews will still be able to fly their planned 56-day missions starting in August and in November.

Without a successful repair job, however, Skylab will be virtually useless. Heat in the craft is too high for men to live aboard. This would spell total failure for the new $3.6-billion American space project, of which the space station is the key element.

Changing of Test Standards Stirs New Quarrel Over F-15

By Michael Getler

WASHINGTON, May 18 (WP). —The Air Force's $7.8-billion F-15 fighter project has been plunged into new controversy over disclosures that critical changes in jet-engine test requirements and contractual agreements with the manufacturer were made without the knowledge of top Air Force and civilian Pentagon officials.

The changes were made March 30 by the manager of the Air Force's F-15 project, Maj. Gen. Benjamin Bellis, just before a crucial 150-hour endurance test of the plane's engine was to be made.

In little-noticed congressional testimony last week before the House Defense Appropriations subcommittee, former Air Force Secretary Robert Seamans said that neither he nor Air Force Chief of Staff John D. Ryan knew about the changes until April 14.

By that time, a modified test of the engine, in which Gen. Bellis had relaxed the test requirements called for in the contract, was nearing completion. In effect, Gen. Bellis had given his okay to engine-manufacturer Pratt and Whitney to make the modified test and he agreed that successful completion meant that the manufacturer had satisfied its contractual requirement. In turn, that meant that $38 million in initial production funds could be released to the firm. The test had to be modified because a previously troublesome engine part still had to be redesigned.

At the Pentagon on Wednesday, Defense Department spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said that Gen. Bellis has the authority to make such decisions. But, he added, "obviously" Mr. Seamans and Deputy Secretary of Defense William P. Clements "would have liked to have been involved . . . and to consider that decision with Gen. Bellis."

Mr. Clements, in a letter to the House committee Tuesday, generally defended Gen. Bellis's decision as one that "permits an orderly continuation of the F-15 development program with reduced risks" until some previously troublesome engine parts are fixed.

Privately, however, a number of top Air Force and civilian officials question Gen. Bellis's judgment in keeping such decisions to himself on such a high-priority, expensive and controversial project.

The Air Force actions also have provoked considerable annoyance in some quarters of Congress, especially in the House Appropriations Committee, which last year reduced funds for the F-15 because of engine problems.

It is known that there was considerable dispute within the Air Force as to exactly how the results of the April test should be announced.

Rep. Les Aspin, D., Wis., has called the episode "an awfully shady deal, even by Pentagon standards," and has demanded an investigation by the General Accounting Office. He charged the Air Force with certifying the F-15 engine for production "on the basis of totally trumped up tests, planned and executed in agreement with a defense contractor." As a result, Rep. Aspin said, "tens of millions of dollars in developmental costs have been passed on from the engine manufacturer, Pratt and Whitney, to the taxpayer."

Navy Opposes Plan

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP). —The Navy opposes a Marine Corps plan to buy 138 of the jet fighters that now are the Navy's mainstay.

Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt told a House Appropriations subcommittee Wednesday that he feels it would be a "very bad decision" for the Marine Corps to buy the F-4J fighters rather than the F-14s now under development.

Adm. Zumwalt refused to state his primary objection, saying that it is classified.

Gen. Robert E. Cushman jr., the Marine Corps commandant, had asked for the F-4 fighters, saying that he needed more planes at less cost.

Navy Secretary John W. Warner said that a Pentagon committee will recommend shortly whether the Navy should stay with its F-4s, continue F-14 development or switch to the F-15.

Mrs. Gandhi's Foes Say She Used Influence to Aid Her Son

By Kasturi Rangan

NEW DELHI, May 18 (NYT).— A controversy involving a son of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi is providing ammunition for political opponents who seek to embarrass her.

In Parliament on Wednesday, members of Mrs. Gandhi's New Congress party engaged in a fierce 5-hour debate with opposition party members who accused the Prime Minister of using her influence to favor her younger son, Sanjay Gandhi, 26, in setting up a plant outside New Delhi for the manufacture of small cars.

Shyam Nandan Mishra, leader of the old Congress party, which broke away from Mrs. Gandhi's party four years ago, charged that three government ministers had "deliberately misled" Parliament when they were questioned about the automobile project. He demanded that the ministers be censured and an inquiry into the project begun.

Mr. Mishra asserted that Mr. Gandhi, the managing director of the $40-million project, had been able to acquire the backing of industrialists and the nationalized banks because his mother was prime minister. He added that the New Delhi government and the Haryana State government—both controlled by Mrs. Gandhi's party—had extended favors to the project "in violation" of several laws.

Mr. Mishra was supported by almost all the other opposition parties in Parliament, while a large number of Congress party members spoke in defense of the government. However, his demand for censure and an inquiry was rejected by a voice vote. Mrs. Gandhi was not present during the debate.

The prime minister has denied all allegations of impropriety, arguing that she could not deny an opportunity to Mr. Gandhi "just because he is my son."

Otherwise, she demanded, "How am I going to justify my policy to encourage the young men in the country?"

Dogs, Posse Capture 4 in Murder of 6

Fugitives Tracked In Heavy Forest

WELCH, W.Va., May 18 (AP). —Three men wanted in the slayings of six members of a Georgia family surrendered peacefully today when police and bloodhounds found them sleeping beneath a cliff.

A fourth man sought in the case was captured earlier.

State trooper F. E. Thomas said the three men captured today offered no resistance, although police said the men had "a number" of weapons. He said they were "worn out and apparently suffering from exposure and exhaustion."

The fourth fugitive was captured last night when the four men abandoned their car to escape a police roadblock. Police set up the roadblock after four men robbed a store and escaped with several firearms. Three of the men from the car fled on foot into a wooded, mountainous area.

Mr. Thomas said the dogs picked up a fresh trail at about dawn in a heavily wooded section of McDowell County and followed it about five miles for about two hours.

All 'Cooperative'

"All three had crawled back underneath a rock cliff and were sleeping," he said. "They were cooperative."

The captured men are Carl Isaacs jr., 19, and Wayne Coleman, 26, both escapees from a prison work camp in Maryland, and Isaacs's half-brother, William, 15, and George Dungee, 35, an escaped convict.

The four men were sought in the slayings of five male members of a rural Georgia family and the rape and murder of one victim's young wife.

The bodies of the five men were found early Tuesday in a mobile home on their farm near Reynoldsville. The nude, bruised body of the woman was found later in the day in a nearby field. Police said she had been tortured.

In Georgia, Seminole County Sheriff Dan White said warrants charging each of the four with six counts of murder were being flown to West Virginia.

Mr. White said he is requesting immediate extradition of the four to Georgia, but that they would not be jailed in Seminole County because of the ill-feeling among the residents of the community.

Kissinger, Pompidou Confer On Summit Talks With Nixon

PARIS, May 18 (IHT).—Henry A. Kissinger met for one hour and 20 minutes with President Georges Pompidou today to lay the groundwork for Mr. Pompidou's summit meeting with President Nixon in Iceland May 31.

Mr. Nixon's meeting with Mr. Pompidou will be the last in his series of meetings with European leaders before his European visit this fall. It is expected to be dominated by economic and monetary questions, with the French pressing for an early monetary solution with concrete steps toward dollar consolidation. The French also are taking a tough stance on the world trade negotiations starting this fall.

Elysée Palace sources declined to go into the substance of the meeting today, but they indicated that Europe's relations with the United States would be a principal subject during British Prime Minister Edward Heath's visit here starting Monday.

They said that it would be basic for Britain and France, along with the other EEC countries, to adopt a common position for the negotiations with Washington. The first question to be settled, they said, was that of a new monetary agreement, without which, they said, a trade agreement would be meaningless.

The French sources conceded that there existed differences between France and Britain over agriculture policy and said that Mr. Pompidou would certainly remind Mr. Heath that the EEC's Common Agricultural Policy was not negotiable in the coming trade talks.

They also said that the EEC's economic and monetary union was being impeded by floating currencies, including the pound sterling, and suggested that it would be difficult to get on with the EEC regional development program backed by the British until the pound ended its float.

The sources said that there will be no discussion of Franco-British nuclear cooperation. They also ruled out the idea of an Atlantic summit meeting, among EEC members and the United States, during Mr. Nixon's visit to Europe. The idea was floated a few weeks ago by West German Chancellor Willy Brandt.

Lawyer F. Lee Bailey Is Indicted in Fraud

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP). —Businessman Glenn W. Turner and lawyer F. Lee Bailey were indicted by a federal grand jury today on charges of mail fraud and conspiracy in connection with the sale of distributorships for three of Mr. Turner's firms, the Justice Department said.

The three firms and eight other men also were named in a 28-count indictment returned in a federal court in Orlando, Fla.

The companies, each of which has Mr. Turner as chairman of its board, are Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., Dare-to-Be-Great, Inc. and Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc., all with headquarters in Orlando.

Paul Gast Dies; Led Moon-Rock Study at Houston

HOUSTON, May 18 (NYT).— Paul W. Gast, 43, professor of geology at Columbia University and chief of the Division of Planetary and Earth Sciences at the Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center here, died Wednesday after a long illness.

For the last three years, Prof. Gast had been in charge of the study of the rocks gathered in the Apollo missions to the moon.

In directing the team of scientists studying the lunar rocks at the space center, he was credited with achieving some of the success of the exploration program.

Prof. Gast's contributions to geochemistry were in several fields. He was a leader in developing the rebidium-strontium and uranium-lead isotope methods of dating rocks, as applied to studies designed to learn the moon's age.

He received many awards in recognition of his achievements.

Illinois Mother of 5 Jailed in Vote Fraud

CHICAGO, May 18 (AP).—A mother of five children was sentenced yesterday to six months in prison for election fraud in the 1972 primary.

Dorothy P. Smith, 47, was one of three polling judges sentenced by U.S. District Judge William J. Bauer. Her daughter, Vickie Modica, 22, and Bernice Baker, 30, were placed on five years' probation. Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Modica were Democratic judges; Mrs. Baker was a Republican judge. Mrs. Smith was accused of two counts of fraudulent voting through the use of false addresses and of conspiracy to forge ballot applications.

UN Agencies Seek Food for Famine Area

10 Million Africans Facing Starvation

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., May 18 (UPI).—A representative of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) said yesterday that about 10 million people in six nations along the southern edge of the Sahara were threatened with immediate famine.

Belgian Sen. Raymond Scheyven told a news briefing that he was seeking help in the United States, Canada and Western Europe to prevent starvation in the area.

Delegated by Addeke H. Boerma, director-general of FAO, Mr. Scheyven said he has already secured 400,000 metric tons of foodstuffs from different sources. The World Food Program (WFP), a special UN agency, will provide 50,000 tons more, he said.

Mr. Scheyven estimated that about 300,000 tons of these emergency supplies had reached African ports, but he emphasized that planes and helicopters would be needed to distribute the food over the 2,000-mile area.

Mauritania, Senegal, Mali, Upper Volta, Niger and Chad are the countries affected by the drought.

Mr. Scheyven said he had conferred here with Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim and UN aid officials, including Henry Labouisse, executive director of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) to round up further assistance.

He also plans to visit Washington to discuss financial support with World Bank president Robert S. McNamara, and with U.S. government officials.

Earlier this week, the Economic and Social Council decided to give all possible aid to the countries in the drought zone, in response to an appeal by Mr. Boerma for a $15-million emergency program.

SEC Suit Names L.A. Times Head In Oil-Gas Fraud

WASHINGTON, May 18 (Reuters).—Los Angeles Times publisher Otis Chandler was named yesterday in a suit filed by the Securities and Exchange Commission against a California promoter of oil and gas drilling firms.

The SEC complaint accused promoter Jack P. Burke of fraud and misappropriating funds. Mr. Chandler was cited for his alleged failure to disclose that he received payment for some of the interests sold and that he was receiving "proportional participation" in the drilling programs.

The SEC said the scheme involved about $30 million of oil and gas funds sold to more than 2,000 investors through Geotek Resources and other companies controlled by Mr. Burke. The agency claimed that millions of dollars obtained from the fraudulent sale of the funds since 1964 had been misappropriated.

In Los Angeles, Mr. Chandler said in a statement: "I fully and publicly disclosed in August of 1972 my connection with the Geotek funds and various oil ventures of Jack P. Burke. I am satisfied that my role in this matter has been morally correct and legally defensible."

The king climbed into a Concorde at Orly Airport and for 10 minutes listened to the sales talk of Henri Ziegler, director of the French firm Aerospatiale.

King Faisal told Mr. Ziegler he wanted to see the new Airbus. When no model of the transport plane was available at the Paris airport, Mr. Ziegler promised to have one flown to Geneva for the king's inspection.

Web of Suspicion

White House acknowledgment that the President ordered wiretaps on 13 National Security Council aides and four newsmen—reportedly at the personal instigation of Henry A. Kissinger in some cases—offers further dismaying evidence of the degree to which individual liberties and the integrity of the executive branch itself have been compromised under the climate of self-righteousness, secrecy and suspicion in which the Nixon administration has operated.

The Justice Department asserts that the taps were permissible under the Constitution and the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, which declares that nothing in the act "shall limit the constitutional power of the President to take such measures as he deems necessary to protect the nation against actual or potential attack or other hostile acts of a foreign power, to obtain foreign intelligence information deemed essential to the security of the United States or to protect national security information against foreign intelligence activities."

Legal authorities differ over the powers ascribed to the President in the act, especially when invoked against American citizens. Last June, the Supreme Court ruled illegal the federal government's use of wiretapping and electronic surveillance to monitor domestic radicals without first obtaining judicial warrants. The court declared that "Fourth Amendment freedoms cannot properly be guaranteed if domestic surveillance may be conducted solely within the discretion of the executive branch."

Even if the Fourth Amendment safeguards do not apply to the government aides and newsmen involved—which is difficult to believe—no evidence has been presented so far that would indicate that the leaks which prompted surveillance constituted a serious threat to national security. The wiretaps were first ordered in response to a report by William Beecher in The New York Times that American B-52 bombers had raided Communist supply dumps and base camps inside Cambodia, without protest from the Cambodian government.

That was hardly news to the Communists, or to the Cambodians. It was information to which the American people were entitled, even if it may have caused some embarassment in Phnom Penh—not enough, incidentally, to prevent the Cambodian government from resuming relations with Washington the following month.

As has so often proved the case with this and previous administrations, the secrecy that the White House sought to impose through highly dubious means seems to have been aimed more at preserving its own interests than the national interest. As one White House source has put it, "There wasn't one member of the staff who was disloyal to the country. But they were disloyal to Kissinger, and they were giving him problems."

There are certainly times when officials who cannot go along with official policy should quit or be fired. No organization can countenance the systematic disclosure of its confidences. But neither can it afford to become so obsessed with secrecy that it breaks faith with its own people, resorting to internal espionage in the absence of the most compelling danger to the national security.

The administration has apparently become ensnared in the web of its own suspicions.

As Tito Tires

For a man of 80, President Tito of Yugoslavia celebrated last New Year's with an energy suggesting he was decades younger. Not until 5 a.m. did he go to bed after a night of making speeches, singing, drinking toasts, dancing. But now, less than five months later, it has been officially indicated in Belgrade that Tito is no longer immune to the effects of age. His fatigue and need to conserve his energy have resulted in a medically ordered rest period which, among other things, kept him from a major party conference.

All this has inevitably focused attention on the man Tito has apparently chosen as his successor, Stane Dolanc, a 47-year-old Slovene who is secretary of the executive bureau of the Yugoslav League of Communists. For months Mr. Dolanc has been prominently at Tito's side as the latter has conducted his massive shakeup and purge of Yugoslavia's government and party hierarchies. The suspicion must arise that many were purged to clear the road for Mr. Dolanc.

President Tito is very much alive and may, conceivably, recover his full strength and tempestuous energy. If so, Mr. Dolanc will face dangers similar to those that have assailed prematurely designated successors in other Communist nations. But if Tito were suddenly to become totally incapacitated or disappear from the scene Mr. Dolanc would not have an easy time of it either. The purges have not eliminated all ambitious figures from the Yugoslav ruling heights; and the basic nationality, economic and other tensions are not nearly solved.

Tito was the creator of modern Yugoslavia, winning power in the years that he fought both Nazi troops and anti-Communist forces in his nation's mountains. Mr. Dolanc's road to the heights has been a more bureaucratic one, with all the disadvantages implied in the comparaison with a giant like Tito.

Brezhnev in Bonn

Mr. Brezhnev's visit to Bonn is of momentous importance. It celebrates three years of hectic Russo-German diplomacy, initiated by Herr Brandt, which have ratified and contributed to the alarming change in the European balance of power in the past decade. With all due respect to Herr Brandt's loyalty and good intentions, neither he nor anyone else not suffering from incurable delusions can pretend that there has been the slightest sign of change in Russian intentions during the period of so-called détente.

Mr. Brezhnev, while preaching disarmament and goodwill, has even in the past few months added 3,000 tanks to the Warsaw Pact's strength in Central Europe, where its superiority in all categories was already three to one. Sure of American unilateral reductions, he is stalling on NATO's pleading for mutual and "balanced" reductions. At the European security conference his aim is patently to disrupt NATO.

—From the Daily Telegraph (London).

Nixon and Economics

There can be little doubt that the American economy is in danger of overheating. Partly as a result of the increase in demand, prices are still rising rapidly. With the continuing uncertainty over the dollar, there is a need for the President to take some kind of a lead. Mr. Nixon's difficulty is, of course, the country's preoccupation with the Watergate affair.

The measures of 1971 succeeded at least partly because they were popular at a time when there was a good deal of public support for the President. There can be no certainty that fresh measures at this stage would get off to such an auspicious start.

French A-Tests

In spite of much international protest, France seems determined to proceed with its intended nuclear atmospheric tests in the Southern Pacific. With the arrogance which has become so characteristic of many aspects of France's foreign policy, Paris has up to now shoved aside every protest. For Europe as a whole it is a bad affair that a European country, against the expressed will of more or less directly involved countries like Australia and New Zealand, still proceeds with these tests. Maybe other European countries could find reason to point out this aspect of the matter to France—even if little is to be expected from it.

'I Hear He Has a Secret Plan to End the Scandals'

'Don't Call Me' System at the White House

By James Reston

WASHINGTON.—The more you analyze the testimony in the Watergate scandals, the more you have to wonder about the closed atmosphere or "don't call me" system around the White House in which all these extraordinary events occurred.

H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman were victims of it, both of them described by the President as exemplary public servants, which in his mind they undoubtedly were. But now even Henry Kissinger is charged with dubious conduct, because he too is apparently involved with operating too much within the White House closed-circuit system.

How could Kissinger agree to bugging his own friends and colleagues on the National Security Council staff in the White House, it is asked. And how could Richard Helms, former head of the CIA, allow the agency to be used in a domestic conspiracy, without challenging the White House staff and expressing his doubts and objections directly to the President?

Only One Client

Probably the simplest part of the answer is that the best of men love power and position, and do things or fail to do things that keep them in power, even when they have their own moral doubts. The men around President Johnson in the White House had a phrase for it: At the end of fire-some arguments about whether Johnson's policies in Vietnam were right or wrong, they would argue that "We have only one client—the President of the United States."

This, of course, was precisely the fatal assumption of men like Haldeman and Ehrlichman, only they didn't put it into such a tidy and vulnerable phrase. But Kissinger and Helms were never in such close personal relationships with Nixon. They never had such ties of loyalty over so many years, and yet somehow they went along with ambiguous and dubious things that troubled them morally, and they now find themselves in a very awkward position.

One has to be very careful with this delicate discussion of power, ambition, loyalty, and morality. It involves delicate motives and private philosophies and calculations no outsider can possibly know. For example, before he left Washington for Paris to try to save the Vietnam peace agreement, Kissinger made clear to Gen. Haig and others in the White House—one source says also to the President personally—that if his moral authority was in question as a result of his part in the telephone bugs of his own staff, then he would resign at once.

It is hard to see how this would improve any part of this dismal business. Things are bad enough as they are with the critical Brezhnev meeting, and the arms control and SALT talks, the European conference coming up. The atmosphere of the Nixon system is really at the bottom of this whole thing, and it has to be understood.

Goes Along

According to FBI sources, the White House, worried about leaks of security information in the newspapers, and even suspicious that Kissinger, who was known to have friends in the press, authorized the taps on the reporters and on Kissinger's staff and then asked him to cooperate in the operation, and talk to the late J. Edgar Hoover about the importance of making the government's communications secure.

Kissinger went along with this. Some reports say he took the lead in it, but either way, in the atmosphere of doubt, suspicion, and even hostility on the Haldeman-Ehrlichman side of the White House, he either had to oppose the bugging, in which case he would have been suspected of trying to cover up his own people, or he had to go along with it, or oppose it on moral grounds and get out.

Maybe he should have gotten out, at least after he had negotiated the cease-fire in Paris, and maybe Dick Helms should have gone to the President when the President's men were getting the CIA involved in improper and even illegal activities, but the point is that the Nixon personality and the Nixon staff system don't encourage candor. They require loyalty and obedience, not doubts, questions, or criticisms. The Nixon system is to work through the staff. The staff is suspicious of anybody who questions what the President is doing. There are no rules that say Kissinger and Helms cannot defy the system and insist on confronting the President, but it is hard to remember a man around Washington in the last generation who walked into the Oval Room of the White House and challenged the President, his policies and his staff.

Staff officers, no matter who they are, don't put their careers on the line. Cabinet members from John Gardner under Johnson to George Romney under Nixon, tend to swallow their differences with presidents and go away in silence.

It takes a bold man to tell the President and his staff the truth, no matter how much it hurts. And this Nixon has discouraged from the time he walked into the White House.

As Irving Kristol, who supported President Nixon, says in the Wall Street Journal, "It is the very incomprehensibility of Watergate that gives it such a nightmarish quality . . . what is not at all familiar and what makes Watergate so extraordinary is the sense that practically the entire White House staff, and perhaps even the President himself, have been living in a different world from the rest of us."

What Kristol does not say is that it is the President who creates the atmosphere of unreality and in the process encourages irrational behavior by normally rational men.

The Superpower Bazaar

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS—The odd thing about developing Soviet-American relationships is that although the threat of hot war is over, the cold war about finished, and an era of commercial convergence apparently unfolding, ideological convergence isn't even remotely on the horizon.

Russia no longer boasts, as Khrushchev used to brag, that it is going to bury the United States. But neither—in any sense—does it intend to move toward our political and philosophical concepts.

Nor can America, for that matter, reverse its own ideological position one jot. There seems slight prospect, therefore, that the U.S. government is in a mood to guarantee private concerns against conceivable losses resulting from ventures in the U.S.S.R.

These enterprises must stand on their own feet and fend for themselves without the kind of insurance occasionally granted by Washington to companies investing in underdeveloped Africa or Asia.

This, one might say, represents a healthy atmosphere. When Brezhnev visits President Nixon, he will undoubtedly seek eventual status for Russia as a "most favored" trading nation. And, as chairman of the board for every conceivable Soviet enterprise—all are run by the state—he will offer inducements to private U.S. business, investment and know-how. But all of this must find its commercial, not philosophical, level.

Ripples Spread

Next month's Russo-American big dealing concerns many other countries. West Europe, already confused by the implications of Henry Kissinger's suggestion of a new "Atlantic charter," worries that its increasingly tenuous relationships with North America may become even further strained.

Since détente set in after the 1963 Cuba confrontation, a détente only partially interrupted by Vietnam and temporarily frustrated by Czechoslovakia, our European allies have relished the easement in international strains but have also feared its repercussions on North Atlantic security. They recognize that American public and political opinion urges a smaller U.S. commitment in Europe.

And, since there are really no West European defense institutions—only Atlantic institutions—there is cause for alarm. This is one reason for British Prime Minister Heath's insistence on reaffirmation of "the twin pillars of a revived and reinvigorated Atlantic alliance."

Washington's intention, one may speculate, is to encourage growth of West European defense institutions—plus political unity. And this intention could have inspired President Nixon to cancel earlier objections to London's passing on to Paris nuclear secrets derived from the United States. Clearly that would make less difficult the concept of a pooled Anglo-French atomic force held in trust for Europe; but it is still a distant prospect.

Overall Deal

Brezhnev's main advantage in Washington is that everyone knows the Russians are accustomed to linkage of unrelated bargains, giving here and taking there, for the sake of an overall deal. The European Community, which has yet to develop a unified political policy, doesn't like such concepts of linkage. It has made this clear by divisive reception of Kissinger's suggestion.

But no such inhibitions encumber Brezhnev. He is ready to discuss, in return for what he considers adequate trade benefits, limits on Russian aid to North Vietnam, acceptance of valid nuclear parity, and mutual and balanced troop cuts in central Europe, paring both U.S. and Soviet strength there.

The last point is double-edged. A reduction in overseas garrisons would be widely welcomed by American opinion. Yet it might worry a West Europe that is not itself ready to make up the difference. And it would frighten the Chinese, who assume that any Russian divisions leaving East Germany are likely to show up later in East Siberia.

The trouble, from our President's viewpoint, is that the atmosphere is not propitious for bargaining. Everyone knows that the Russians need economic and technological help, and that Moscow is prepared to negotiate a package, speaking with one monolithic voice.

This is not the case for Common Market Europe, whose components have all been making their private deals with the U.S.S.R., but whose coordinated political entity doesn't yet exist.

Should Brezhnev offer a deal with good commercial prospects, mutual troop reductions, some promise of an aid freeze to Hanoi and—above all—hints of modus vivendi in the Middle East, Mr. Nixon, harassed by Watergate, is in no position to insist on too tough a bargain.

'Herrnstein's Law'

If William F. Buckley jr. is to have a readership it is necessary, of course, that he provide support for the beliefs, and even the prejudices, of a substantial proportion of the Herald Tribune readers. Even so, one would hope that such an obviously intelligent person would provide viewpoints that are insightful and responsible. His recent article "The Travail of Writing About IQs" (IHT, April 27), on the Herrnstein paper in Commentary indicates a notable lapse, if not a rigid lack, in this regard in respect to the important matters of ethnic differences.

It has been known for at least 40 years that as environmental conditions in which individuals develop become more nearly equal, the observed variation in individual differences in respect to any trait (IQ being only one such) can be more nearly attributed to genetic (hereditary) differences: I learned this as an undergraduate some 20 years ago, and it was not new then. To refer (as Buckley does) to this principle as "Herrnstein's law," as if it were a pioneering scientific breakthrough discovered by Herrnstein, or a noteworthy new position in study of race differences, is either unintelligent (if Buckley knows no better) or irresponsible. Herrnstein's viewpoints simply do not deserve the respect accorded to truly novel contributions. This is one major reason why his pronouncements are not regarded with favor by those Mr. Buckley refers to as liberals (actually thoughtful persons who would side with Buckley on other issues).

Partly because Herrnstein's statements are not original, but also because of the times in which these statements are presented, many liberals regard the statements as not only nonsense but irresponsible, dangerous nonsense. The statements do not add new information and yet they are well calculated to fan the flames of conflict between ethnic groups. Because this is true, many label Mr. Herrnstein as racist. What such persons recognize is that Herrnstein gives support to those who wish to explain the plight of the black in our society as due primarily to inadequacies in blacks, and what they wish to say is that anyone who provides such support is racist. This is not accurate or fair thinking, of course, but neither is it reason to elevate the mundane thinking of Herrnstein to the status of "law."

Temper, Temper

In modestly referring himself to the steel the other night ("The finest steel has to go through the hottest fire. I can assure you that this room (where the Republican fund-raising dinner was held) is full of fine steel." IHT, May 11] Richard Nixon was probably taking a page from Harry Truman's remark about heat in the kitchen.

Well, there's a big difference between Harry Truman and Richard Milhous Nixon, and I'd suggest that his fatuous metaphor about fine steel be amended to read "first-class brass."

It is incredible that the President of the United States is incapable of distinguishing the difference between the heat created by legitimate difference and that generated by bipartisan repugnance for dishonesty.

If I were Pittsburgh, I'd sue our well-tempered President for libel. Talk like his could give real steel a bad name.

Consider the case of Dr. singer. Apart from his brill as a diplomatic theorist and tiator, he has shown not moral courage at the Nat Security Council. He has sorted freely with journalists others known to be critics the President. He has com his own reservations about pects of official policy.

with no accomplices. He said he did it to protest a ceremony honoring Police Commissioner Luigi Calabresi, who was assassinated a year ago.

Suspect Questioned

Police questioned an official of Ciasm, the union of the Neo-Fascist Italian Social Movement —to whom they said Bertoli paid a visit Wednesday. Bertoli bears a striking resemblance to the identity of the man who was seen shooting the police chief but never caught.

Leftists had blamed Mr. Calabresi for the death of anarchist Giuseppe Pinelli, who jumped or fell from a window during questioning in 1969 about a bank bombing in which 16 persons died.

"Now that you have caught me, do to me what you did to Pinelli. Push me out the window," witnesses heard Bertoli tell police who arrested him. Investigators said Bertoli told them he acted to avenge Pinelli's death.

Graziella Bartolon, 22, an employee of a shop, died in a hospital without regaining consciousness less than an hour after the bombing.

Kibbutz Remembers

KARMIYYA, Israel, May 18 (AP).—The hand grenade used in the Milan attack was apparently stolen from an Israeli kibbutz where the suspected killer lived for more than two years, it was reported today.

Members of the Karmiyya Kibbutz said Bertoli, known to them as "Roberto," left Israel for Marseilles May 8, the day after Israel's 25th independence anniversary.

Part of his sea passage was paid by the kibbutz, whose members said everyone on the farm had access to grenades and armaments used by paramilitary defense units.

"It was no problem for Roberto to get a grenade," one member told newsmen.

The Israelis described "Roberto" as a quiet, likable man who remained in his room reading books in Italian, French and Hebrew and rarely left the farm, even to go on excursion trips.

As a volunteer, he was required to work six hours a day, but he worked much longer in the kibbutz poultry sheds during his two-year stay.

"He was given to spells of depression," said Rachel Vered, who worked with the foreign volunteers.

Blamed Family

She said Roberto often talked about his past and blamed his moody outlook on a former girl friend and his family. He said before he came to Israel his girl friend had left him and he often quarreled with his brother, who held opposite political views. His parents were divorced, he said.

"He never had a girl friend in all his two years here," said Noah Shusterman, who was Bertoli's boss at the chicken coops. "We wondered why."

The Israelis begged him to stay when he told them he wanted to leave Israel and go to France.

"I can't remain," he was quoted as saying. "I'm not Jewish and I have no future in Israel."

But he was able to speak, read and write Hebrew fluently, the Israelis said.

"He thought the Lod [Airport] massacre [by Japanese terrorists] was terrible," one member said, "but he rejoiced in the Israeli raid against guerrilla chieftains in Beirut last month."

Bertoli's passport was in the name of Massimo Magri, aged 31.

Scientists in Plea On Soviet Woman

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., May 18 (Reuters).—Scientists from the United States, Canada, France, West Germany, Belgium, India, Iran, Israel, Pakistan, Portugal and Sweden appealed yesterday for clemency for a Soviet woman microbiologist sentenced to four years in jail.

They charged in a petition to the UN that the woman, Nina Strokata, was being punished for having refused to denounce her husband, described as a political prisoner.

The scientists said Mrs. Strokata, 48, was sentenced one year ago on unproved charges of circulating anti-Soviet literature.

The petition, signed by 279 scientists, asked Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim and the UN Commission for Human Rights to intervene with Soviet authorities to obtain an open trial for Mrs. Strokata.

Price Rollbacks a Key Example

How South Korea Wins in War on Inflation

By Sam Jameson

SEOUL, May 18.—Every morning, Monday through Saturday, top officials of seven government ministries and agencies and a private business representative gather in the office of the vice-minister of the Economic Planning Board.

The subject of their meetings is prices.

Any increase on any of the 600-plus items in South Korea's wholesale price index discovered on the previous day is reported to the officials. The ministry concerned is asked to find out what caused it and report back.

If the price increase cannot be justified, the company or the industry involved is asked to rescind it.

They always comply, according to Lee Jae Sul, vice-minister of the planning board and chairman of the new Price Stabilization Council.

In fact, rollbacks in prices—ranging from 2 to 16 percent—on 84 commodities have been ordered and implemented since the meetings of vice-ministers started in December.

"These are price reductions which they [the companies concerned] volunteered and we [the government] happily accepted," Mr. Lee said, almost without a smile.

The statement summed up the economic policy which President Chung Hee Park imposed last Aug. 3 with a decree that effectively wiped out the traditional "curb market" for loans, by which street lenders provided money at exorbitant rates of interest. The process was accelerated Oct. 17 when the 55-year-old ex-general declared martial law and proceeded to rewrite the constitution to give himself unfettered power.

Now, after months of hectic reforms and decreed legislation, the government has emerged more than ever as the unquestioned arbiter of the economy.

The reforms may have produced a new kind of economy in South Korea. Instead of one in which growth raced one step ahead of galloping inflation and frenetic refinancing of usurious loans, the economy today is beginning to take the shape of a functioning institution.

Prices are only one example, but they hold the key, Mr. Lee and other officials said.

Since the August decree freezing all outstanding loans and declaring war on inflation, the wholesale price increase has been held to a seven-month rise of 2.1 percent. On an annual basis, 1972 wholesale prices rose 14 percent.

Most important, the three winter months of January through March—which traditionally produce the biggest jumps in prices—passed with only a 1.2 percent increase, compared with 5.2 percent in the same period last year, Mr. Lee said.

He expressed confidence that the vicious cycle of the past—domestic inflation and repeated devaluations—has been snapped. The government since August has reiterated that it will maintain the exchange rate at the level of about 400 won to $1 and, so far, has made good on that promise.

The freeze on all loans, accompanied by a government edict slashing interest rates, appears to have worked. U.S. diplomats and businessmen said that while some small loans are still being made by individuals, the "curb market" has been eliminated as a statistical factor in the economy. Before August, only 14 percent of the nation's business was not involved in the market.

In addition, the August attack on the curb market set the stage for the development of secondary money markets, such as a stock exchange. The government has stepped in to accelerate this process, too, by ordering large family-owned enterprises to go public.

Zambia Explains Shooting—Threat To Power Station

LUSAKA, Zambia, May 18 (Reuters).—Zambia tonight confirmed that two Canadian women killed near Victoria Falls on Tuesday were shot by a Zambian sentry but said the women and an American male companion had appeared at the time to be on their way to attack a vital Zambian power station.

In a six-page statement on the incident, the government said the women, Christine Sinclair, 20, and Marjan Drijber, 19, together with John Crothers, had started swimming across the Zambezi River from Rhodesia and had been in Zambian waters when they were shot.

Describing the area in which the incident occurred as inaccessible to tourists, the statement said it had been evident to the troops involved that the group "had a mission" connected with a threat to Zambia's security.

In Rhodesia, police today began an aerial search for one of the young Canadian women. They said she may have dived into the crocodile-infested Zambezi River to escape the bullets.

Earlier police had said that Miss Drijber had died when she fell in the river after being shot.

Theater in London

Guinness and Death

By John Walker

LONDON, May 18 (IHT).—Alan Bennett has just discovered death with all the glee and giggling joy of a schoolboy stumbling across sex. The skull beneath the skin! What fun!

To Mr. Bennett this fact of life, that we all die, does not dignify man but makes our actions ridiculous and contemptible. The result is his "Habeas Corpus" at the Lyric Theatre, a ridiculously funny and far from contemptible play but one that is ice-cold at heart.

Actually, "Habeas Corpus" is not exactly a play. Its characters assume their identities too perfunctorily, and the plot, a farcical one of mistaken identity and misplaced lust, is too mechanical to qualify. Nor is it a revue, a form Mr. Bennett helped to bring to perfection as one of the four wits of "Beyond the Fringe." The clue is given as the curtain rises and Mrs. Swabb, a cleaning lady, advances to the footlights, introduces the other characters, and announces that she is Fate. We are in a Midsummer Night's Dream world, of the bastard entertainment by Bottom and company which, like Mr. Bennett's, offered "very tragical mirth."

The evening owes something to vaudeville, much to Ronald Eyre's deft direction and Derek Cousin's surrealist set, and more to Alec Guinness's rueful performance as Arthur Wicksteed, a doctor who longs for contact with young flesh while shrinking from his frustrated, libidinous wife.

There are moments, for Mr. Bennett of all contemporary British writers, excluding the nostalgic John Osborne, is much in love with the past, when the play strikes the same elegiac and regretful mood as Thomas Gray's "Ode on the Distant Prospect of Eton College": "Alas, regardless of their doom/the little victims play."

Gray decided, too, that where "ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise" and Mr. Bennett is also capable of such stupendous truisms. He who lusts longest, declaims Sir Alec, lusts last. The entire cast is, indeed, in a fever of sex, each seeking a release that only death can bring. This gloomy speculation lies beneath the surface of some frantic fun.

The dialogue is crisp, wittily inventive, and exactly pins down social attitudes. ("Fetch in the delphiniums," cries the doctor. "I think we have a private patient.") There is a hilarious running joke about a false bosom fitter that has the excellent Andrew Sachs forever flexing his fingers with professional aplomb and feeling the wrong breasts, while trousers descend around the ankles with split-second timing.

The play, then, is funny and Mr. Guinness is given admirable support, particularly by those twin dragons, Margaret Courtenay and Joan Sanderson. But the fun is joyless. Where others, faced with mortality, have urged us to gather ye rosebuds while ye may, Mr. Bennett loftily observes that it won't do us much good, that the roses are rotten this year.

At the Comedy Theatre we are back in a Victorian world where

love and logorrhea were inseparable. Jerome Kilty's "Dear Love" is based on the 579 letters that Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett wrote to each other during their two years' courtship and he has done an excellent job of chopping up their long-winded effusions into sharp, continuous duologue. Keith Michell gives Browning a bounding, engaging energy, although his poetry reading is decidedly eccentric. Geraldine McEwan as the sofa-bound Elizabeth, glimpsing and finding freedom, gives a nicely judged febrile performance, full of nervous sighs and gasps. Carl Toms has provided a pleasing set for the couple to sit and read to each other. Personally, I prefer to see a play when I go to the theater.

At Drury Lane, "No No Nanette," revived after 48 years, is in poor shape. It looks as if it needs a couple of weeks more rehearsal to put a little bounce and bite into what is a ponderous, flat-footed evening. Burt Shevelove's production, despite its loving attention to period detail, is merely pretentious, with everything being played for much more than it is worth.

Vincent Youmans's score contains only two good numbers—"Tea for Two" and "I want to Be Happy"—and they are endlessly reprised and squeezed dry of their nostalgic appeal in an attempt to bolster this sad and sagging old show.

The cast is uniformly bad, apart from Thora Hird whose low-comedy routine as the maid provided the evening's only humor. Significantly she is the only one who scorns to attempt an American accent. The others were too concerned with their accents to attempt any acting. This may not be true of Anna Neagle since she was inaudible, although a high pitched bleat was heard when she opened her mouth to sing.

There were three moments when the show looked as if it might come alive: a mass tap-dancing routine, another that had chorus girls walking on beach balls, and a duet between Anne Rogers and Teddy Green, both of them momentarily enlivened. But sloth and torpor soon returned and the witless, empty evening went endlessly on.

Opera in Naples

Caballé's Norma — A Triumph

By William Weaver

NAPLES (IHT).—There are few opera houses in the world that can rival Naples's San Carlo in beauty, and there are few audiences that can equal the warmth and the enthusiasm of the Neapolitans. That enthusiasm is not easily aroused, but when the spark flies, when the great red and gold and white auditorium catches fire, the spectator is in for a memorable occasion.

Such an occasion took place this week with Bellini's "Norma," starring Montserrat Caballé in the title role. The great Catalan soprano is not a newcomer to Italy, and she has already sung "Norma", at La Scala last Christmas, with great success. But for the Neapolitans, who have not enjoyed a particularly exciting opera season this past year, Caballé's interpretation of the Bellini heroine was epoch-making. The soprano received an ovation of the sort reserved, in the past, for the Callas and the Tebaldi of the great days: and with Caballé's Norma, those great days seemed, indeed, to have returned.

No one was surprised that Caballé sang sweetly. Her now numerous recordings—including a recent "Norma"—have made it clear that her voice, for sheer beauty of timbre, is unparalleled these days. But what came as a revelation, and a welcome one, was Caballé's sensitive, dignified, authoritative acting. Like Callas in the days before her famous slimming, Caballé limits her stage movements, but each movement tells. There was never a clumsy or an insignificant moment, and when—for example—she turned her back slightly, in the opening scene, to begin the agitated, intimate cabaletta after her noble "Casta diva," the shift of the scene's dramatic focus was made clear with great skill and economy. If, in the course of the opera, she occasionally let a vein of metal glint through the velvet of the voice, to illustrate the courage and determination of Irminsul's priestess, she was tenderness itself when it came to portraying Norma's private torment. Needless to say, in Norma's final plea to her father, the simple and moving "Deh! non volerli vittime," Caballé left few eyes dry in the great theater.

Except for the Pollione of Piermiranda Ferrara (about whom the less said the better), the protagonist was ably assisted. Her Adalgisa was the suitably young and pretty Viorica Cu whose large voice—if not silken as Caballé's—is impres and remarkably agile. Rome

Attilio Pierelli, exhibition organized by the city of Rome and the Capitolium Magazine, Piazza Margana, Rome, through May.

There are squares with better proportions than the irregular Piazza Margana in a little pocket of Renaissance Rome. But because of a tradition of literary prizes given in a local trattoria, it has become a small cultural center and lately a showplace for outdoor sculpture. In theory, modern sculpture will work well with any background but in practice, in this little square, it hardly ever does.

Pierelli's pieces—one reflects images from two TV screens, another is a convoluted screen like a labyrinth—are no exception. Often symmetrical and in shiny twists and folds of thin metal, his works are not spatially too complex and do little more than mirror the passerby.

Like pieces at preceding shows without bases of any kind, often standing crookedly on the cobblestones, they give the impression of having been left behind by accident. The Italian flair for display is sadly missing. It is a pity the excellent notion of art under the open sky does not inspire a more adequate location, better installation and above all, more interesting sculpture.

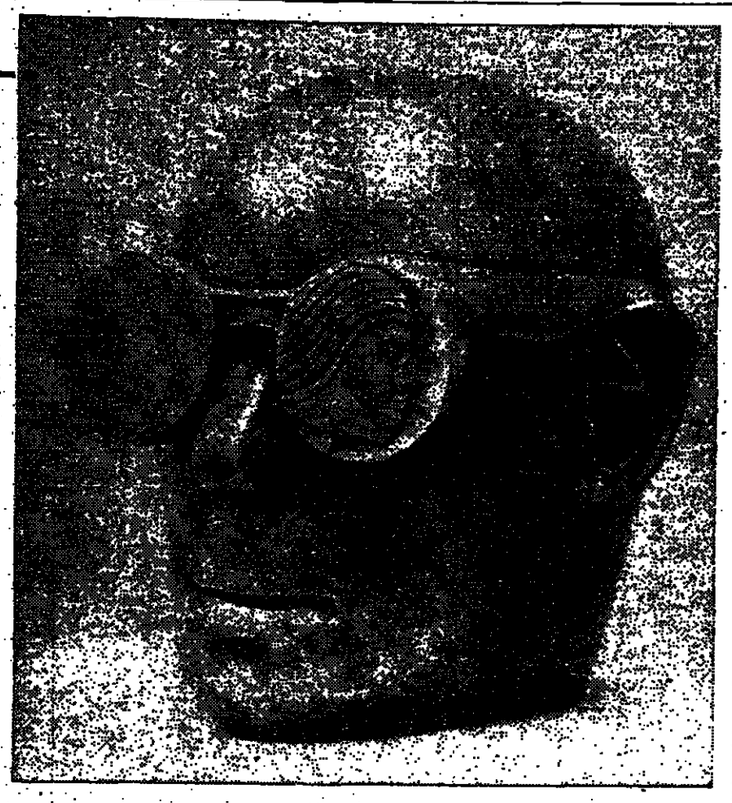
Joachim Schmettau, Tonimelli, 86 Piazza di Spagna, Rome, through May.

Sculptures in nickelplated bronze by this young German are coolly elegant. The intrinsic meaning of daily gestures and occupations is caught in fragments; heads or hands alone indicate the whole pose of the body and are sometimes ornamented in etched lines with the surrounding action as in "Outdoor Breakfast." This adds a contemporary dimension to an art déco flavor of his beautiful Fuller building (in New York) friezes. Unlike that of other young Germans, Schmettau's realism in a detached smooth manner reflects the pleasures, not the pains, of existence.



Schmettau: "Head With Glasses" (1969) nickel-plated bronze.

Arpino

Il Cavaliere d'Arpino, one-time church of Saints Carlo and Filippo, Arpino (Frosinone, province of Lazio, near Rome); through May.

In the late 16th century, Giuseppe Cesari (1560-1640), called Il Cavaliere d'Arpino, was one of the most celebrated and prolific artists. He was practically the court painter of Pope Clement VIII. Among his major commissions were the decorations for the Salone dei Conservatori in the Capitoline palace, the choir of San Martino in Naples, and the enormous frescoes in San Giovanni in Lateran which earned him the "Cavaliere di Cristo" title from his sponsor.

He had unusual insight, for he not only allowed the penniless Caravaggio, newly arrived in Rome, into his workshop, but also turned over a commission from the church of San Luigi dei Francesi for several murals (among them is "The Calling of St. Matthew," a highly regarded work by Caravaggio, and acquired one of Caravaggio's first paintings, the "Sick Bacchus," now in the Borghese Collection in Rome.

While D'Arpino's own work never approached the younger master's revolutionary realism and robust grandeur, his own frescoes and larger oils—epic mise-en-scènes or tableaux of gesturing or languishing saints, and battle scenes—though very well suited to the pomp and ceremonial taste of his powerful patron, today, despite their occasional brio, offer more interest to the art historian than to the ordinary viewer.

And in the churches of the artist's native town in the foothills of the Abruzzi mountains, and also in the show on hand, there are several examples of his somewhat laborious mannerism.

Assembled in an unused early 18th-century chapel, the well-selected exhibition of works from all periods and from museums and important collections sheds a new light on the Cavaliere d'Arpino. The smaller oils of his middle and late years, and his drawings of putti, male and female nudes relate directly to existence in the Ciosciaria countryside. The young nudes placating gods and old men might very well be local girls just having a romp at the brook after the week's wash. In a drawing, a Madonna is enthroned in a pruned willow tree, just like the trees used as temporary deposits for cut twigs, still lining the road into town. A nymph resting on a bag of freshly laundered linen, startled by a satyr, near a ruin very like the citadel still crowning the hill over Arpino, might very well be a comment on not uncommon local occurrences.

In these instances and others, where the official master vanishes and privately enjoys the rustic charms of his origins, D'Arpino does his most enduring work.

The Art Market: A Survey of Paris Auctions

By Souren Melikian

PARIS, May 18 (IHT).—The Connaissance des Arts "Guide 1973 des Ventes Publiques à Paris" (1973 Survey of Paris Auctions) is more than a fine art book and more than a convenient list of records. It shows how the French market changes and how local auctioneers are doing in the Paris-London competition. This, in turn, offers useful points for collectors and dealers on where to sell.

The survey, just published, covers the calendar year of 1972 and makes several points. Among them is that the Hôtel Drouot, where most of the Paris sales are held, has established its position as one of the best places to sell Far Eastern art. Right through the sixties, London was the "obvious" place to dispose of fine Chinese wares.

But the world record now belongs to Paris, where a late 16th-century vase decorated with yellow dragons against a tomato-red background sold for 1,276 million francs on Nov. 10, 1972.

Although the sale by auctioneer Raymond de Nicolay, assisted by expert Michel Beurdeley, was not especially large and included some very ordinary bits and pieces, the one important work—the vase—was cleverly advertised, primarily by direct mailing from the expert's office.

Mr. Beurdeley's son, Jean-Michel, is one of the most active dealers in Far Eastern art and has close Japanese connections. It was the presence of Japanese buyers that resulted in the record price, which far exceeded the auctioneer's hopes.

Similar methods explain the successful sales of Japanese inros (medecine boxes) during 1972. One, signed by Shibata Zeishin (1807-1891), sold for a record 33,600 francs last fall. In speaking of the inro, the "Guide" editors suggest that the rarity of the piece accounts for the high price. This is only part of the truth. Once again, direct advertising emanating from the expert's office and mailed to Japan played an essential role.

Arts Deco

The second area in which Paris scored strongly is that of art déco—as the French call the styles consecrated by the 1925 exhibition at the Musée des Arts Décoratifs. Here, again, direct mail advertising played an important role—thanks to the initiative of a young expert, Jean-Pierre Camard. He has produced some of the best sales catalogues to come out of Paris (largely exploiting—which is perfectly legitimate in the auction circles—the writings of well-known specialists such as Yvonne Brunhammer of the Musée des Arts Décoratifs).

At the sale of Jacques Doucet's collection (Nov. 8, 1972), a four-leaf screen by Eileen Gray, the Irish-born lacquer worker who settled in Paris in 1907, fetched another record price: 187,600 francs. The buyer was an American collector. A superb piece by Pierre Legrain, a chair carved in the "black African" style, went up to 43,500 francs. And two pieces were bought by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York—a rare occurrence at Paris auctions.

In short, it seems that some of the major handicaps of the French salesrooms—sloppy advertising and inadequate cataloguing—are being overcome, largely because of the experts.

However, the auctioneers are improving, as witness the third category in which the French have been doing well of late—rare books. Two sales of books from the collection of Raphael Esmerian—a third and final auction is set for June 6 in Paris—have established Paris as the place to sell books. The two catalogues were monuments to scholarship, with beautiful illustrations (many of which are to be seen again in the Connaissance des Arts "Guide"). Here, again, advertising went far beyond the usual salesroom procedure. It was, in fact, what might be described as "institutional" advertising: Raphael Esmerian is known, personally or by reputation, to every book collector, dealer or curator of importance in the world. The collector wrote his own catalogue entries, which added glamour to the sale.

That a New York collector should have selected Paris for an auction—at least as much out of commercial considerations as from personal attachment to French culture—is a compliment to the Paris market.

Along with the positive aspects, the Connaissance des Arts "Guide" also emphasizes weaknesses. In 1972, there was a dearth of old masters. And it is all too obvious from the meager place given to impressionists and fauves that the best things go abroad, if the vendor is able, legally, to make a choice. The "Guide" also points out—with some courage—that good 18th-century furniture tends to sell here with some difficulty.

All told, the survey provides a faithful picture of French market trends and is worth the attention of anyone interested in the market.

Entertainment in New York

NEW YORK, May 18 (IHT).—This is how critics rate new films and stage productions in New York:

Films

"You're Lying," a Swedish film with English subtitles by Vilgot Sjoman, director of "I Am Curious (Yellow)" and "I Am Curious (Blue)" shares a common form with the earlier movies that Timesman Roger Greenspun calls "the not-exactly documentary." This one begins as a straight documentary about the Swedish penal system, "becomes a fictionalized documentary about a young man who is not rehabilitated in Swedish prisons, and ends as a psychological study about what seems almost a symbiotic relationship between a prisoner and the imprisonment he cannot quite bring himself to escape." As a documentary, "You're Lying," Greenspun thinks, "intends to expose Swedish prisons," but "much of this may be lost on American audiences, for whom the lot of the Swedish prisoner—considerable privacy, personal freedom, leave privileges, etc.—will probably look like summer camp." The prisoner in question is Lasse (Stig Engstrom), a "would-be artist, a would-be writer, a well-developed alcoholic who steals a bit to keep in booze."

Plays

"Cyrano," a musical adapted by Anthony Burgess from the Edmond Rostand play, is rated "altogether very good and partly excellent," by Clive Barnes of The Times who had reservations about music "between the speech-song of 'My Fair Lady' on one side and the impassioned sentiment of 'Man of La Mancha' on the other." However the part of Cyrano suits Christopher Plummer "the way a sheath suits its rapier," Barnes says. Plummer "embraces the physicality" of the part. "His swordplay is beautifully deft, his movements uncommonly apt, and his whole performance has a kind of kinetic grace. He is also unusually successful—helped here by Burgess and his director (Michael Kidd)—in making Cyrano a man without sentimentality, which is very rare indeed." Leigh Berry, a "bright-looking girl with a lustrous voice," is "delicate and yet passionate" as Roxana, and Mark Lamos is "bluffly attractive" as Christian.

"La Carpa de los Rasquachis" ("The Tent of the Underdogs") in English and Spanish at the Chelsea Theater, is being presented by El Teatro Campesino, the farm workers' theater that grew out of the Delano grape-pickers strike in 1965. The group usually stages guerrilla theater skits called "actos." This is their first full-length play. "Though the purpose is agit-prop," Timesman Mel Gussow wrote, "this is also entertainment. It amuses at the same time as it arouses. The show has a spontaneity and a simplicity of vision." The "rasquachis" (by inference all Chicanos) are pictured as long oppressed and deprived, "cheated from the second they cross the border." The villains (wearing devil masks) are labor contractors, landowners and political operators.

Bache to Acquire Halsey Stuart

Bache & Co. has agreed to acquire Halsey Stuart & Co. from Chicago Title & Trust Co. for cash. Chicago Title, which made the announcement, did not give the amount. Bache joined Chicago Title in the announcement, saying it plans to continue Halsey Stuart as a subsidiary under the present management. John Leslie, chairman of Bache, said the new relationship will strengthen the underwriting, trading and institutional capabilities of both firms.

Franklin Plans Talcott Acquisition

Franklin New York Corp., holding-company parent of Franklin National Bank, will proceed with negotiations to acquire Talcott National Corp. Franklin's decision signifies its intention to accept the offer last month by Italian financier Michele Sindona to sell Franklin his majority interest in Talcott National at cost. Mr. Sindona, who owns 22 percent of Franklin, bought 1.6 million of Talcott's three million shares outstanding in little more than three days of rapid purchases in late March. The exact price Mr. Sindona paid for his shares is not known, but he acted to thwart a tender offer of $17 a share by Loews Corp. At $17 a share, his 1.6 million shares would have cost more than $27 million. A Franklin spokesman says it is not yet known how Franklin will pay for the Talcott shares, or whether Mr. Sindona would finance the purchase. Nor was it known what steps Franklin may take to acquire the remaining Talcott shares.

Libya Criticizes Oil Pacts, Will Press for Full Control

By Jim Hoagland

TRIPOLI, Libya, May 18 (WP). —Libyan Premier Abdel Salam Jalloud has sharply criticized the joint ownership agreements that Western oil companies have worked out with Persian Gulf petroleum producers and indicated that Libya would press U.S. oil companies here for "full control" of their operations immediately.

Mr. Jalloud said the agreements were "not in the interests of the people of the gulf" and had been "overtaken by events."

His remarks yesterday came on the eve of important new negotiations here which many oilmen fear could unsettle the complex participation accords they have worked out to meet Western energy needs and Arab demands for greater control over national oil resources.

Negotiators Arrive

Negotiating teams for three U.S. companies arrived here yesterday and are expected to begin talks with Petroleum Minister Izzadin Mobruk this weekend.

Mr. Jalloud declined to say what Libya would do if its demands were not met by the companies, who appear to have disagreements themselves over how to respond to Libya.

"I am not going to take the pessimistic view," he said when asked about reported threats of nationalization or a complete oil shutoff. "We will await the talks."

Jalloud Acts

Industry sources reported that Mr. Jalloud, who normally takes over oil negotiations when they reach a decisive point, unexpectedly called in a local representative of one oil consortium on April 30. He then brusquely announced that Libya wanted 100 percent control, for which it would pay net book value and then sell back all oil produced in Libya to the companies at world market prices.

Libyan oil officials have since specified that sales contracts would be for a short term, probably five to eight years, in contrast to the long-term deals which Western companies have worked out with Iran and Saudi Arabia.

The Libyans are thought to have specified net book value as a way of sharply depreciating the value of the physical facilities they would take over. Saudi Arabia and the other countries would find themselves paying higher prices for their shares of the companies.

OPEC Postpones Meeting

VIENNA, May 18 (Reuters).—The 11-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries today confirmed it had postponed an emergency conference scheduled for Monday to discuss demands for higher oil prices. A spokesman said the meeting would now convene on May 26th.

Slump in U.S. on Way, Some Analysts Claim

NEW YORK, May 18 (AP-DJ). —A U.S. recession is just beginning to come into view, according to some analysts who specialize in deciphering economic statistics that normally foreshadow business slumps.

The report emanates especially from analysts at the National Bureau of Economic Research, the nonprofit organization that keeps official track of recession and expansion periods in the United States. Evidence of a coming recession is also being reported by an increasing number of independent forecasters who keep a close tab on early-warning statistics.

The signs of a slump do not yet register in the widely followed index of 12 key leading indicators that the Commerce Department issues monthly. In March, the latest month for which figures are available, this composite yardstick stood at a record 161.1 percent of the 1967 base of 100.

The March gain over the February level, the previous record, was a healthy 1.4 percent. In the first quarter as a whole, the index spurted 4.6 percent, one of the sharpest three-month jumps since World War II.

But recession signs do already show up in some other unpublicized data that, in the view of national bureau analysts, "lead" the leading indicators.

'Clear Evidence'

Geoffrey H. Moore, former commissioner of labor statistics who heads business-cycle research at the national bureau, summarizes his group's view. "We now see clear evidence that a slowdown, and very possibly a fullfledged recession, lies ahead," the economist says. "It should begin to show up in the index of leading indicators before many more months."

The indicator that Mr. Moore and his colleagues at the national bureau are paying particular attention to now is an obscure index that is, in fact, a ratio of two other economic indexes—one measuring the movement of so-called coincident indicators, which tend to move concurrently with general business, and another measuring so-called lagging indicators, which, as the name implies, tend to lag behind the general business trend.

By Year's End

This ratio of coincident to lagging indicators, Mr. Moore says, has recently been dropping quite sharply. Indeed, he reports, in the years since World War II the ratio has never dropped so sharply for so long—seven months now—without the economy subsequently entering either a pronounced slowdown or an all-out recession.

When, by this yardstick, might a recession hit? On average, the ratio begins to drop about 13 months before a recession sets in, national bureau calculations show. If past patterns prevail, a slump could occur within six months.

This lead time is close to three months longer than the average warning given by the much-publicized index of 12 leading indicators during the postwar era. Occasionally, and some analysts say this may be such a moment, the ratio signals trouble six months or more before warnings are seen in the index of the 12 indicators.

Still another unpublicized "leading" indicator of business trends has recently begun flashing red, according to national bureau economists.

This is an index that measures the ratio of changes in business sales to changes in business inventories. It has been falling since January, and records show that it, too, has tended to turn down several months before the index of key leading indicators points to trouble.

While it continues to set records each month, the behavior of the leading-indicator index itself is beginning to disturb some economists.

Leonard H. Lempert, a private economist based in North Egremont, Massachusetts, has long specialized in interpreting the behavior of the leading indicators. At present, he detects "what may be the first signs of weakness" in their performance.

A similar forecast comes from A. Gary Shilling, chief economist of White Weld & Co., the New York-based securities concern. Mr. Shilling believes a full-fledged recession will be under way by early next year.

Size Unknown

One capital question—what will be the size of the setback?—remains unanswered. "There's just no sure way of telling how bad a recession is going to be until you're into it," Mr. Moore says.

Accordingly, he will venture no guess as to how sharp a slowdown may lie ahead now. It could be merely a "growth recession," he says, in which the rate of business expansion—after eliminating "growth" reflecting merely price increases—slows sharply. Or it could be a bona fide recession, such as the 1969-1970 slump, in which general economic activity, measured in terms of "real" gross national product, actually contracts.

Squeeze on U.S. Banks Seen As Fed Tightens Up Credit

By H. Erich Heinemann

NEW YORK, May 18 (NYT).—The nation's largest banks may find themselves in a painful squeeze as a result of the Federal Reserve System's latest moves to tighten credit, key banking officials said yesterday.

On the one hand, the Fed announced on Wednesday evening that it would impose a new "marginal" reserve requirement on large certificates of deposit issued by banks and at the same time it suspended the interest-rate ceilings that it had previously applied to such deposits. Both of these will have the effect of raising substantially the cost of an important source of lendable funds for the banks.

On the other hand, the administration's Committee on Interest and Dividends, headed by Arthur F. Burns, who is also chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, apparently intends to prevent banks from passing along these added costs to their borrowers quickly.

A spokesman for the committee said yesterday that its existing guidelines—which call on banks to hold increases in their prime lending rates to no more than one-quarter of a percentage point and to make such increases no more frequently than once every three weeks—would remain in effect without change.

The prime, or minimum, interest charge on loans to the biggest and most creditworthy corporations is now 7 percent, but bankers say that if the prime rate reflected current money-market conditions it would be at least 7 1/2 or 7 3/4 percent.

The most recent increase in the prime rate was announced on May 4, which indicates that—if the administration's guidelines are to be observed—the next rise in this key loan charge will not be announced until next Friday, notwithstanding the new cost pressures implied in Wednesday's credit-tightening moves.

A leading Midwestern banker speculated yesterday that the Fed appeared to be trying to squeeze bank profit margins in an attempt to discourage them from making business loans.

But, the banker added, "I'm not sure it will work out that way," implying that large corporations may in any event find ways of getting the money they need.

U.S. Firms Said To Skim Profit On Dollar Cut

SAN FRANCISCO, May 18 (AP-DJ).—U.S. Export-Import Bank president Henry Kearns charged yesterday that some U.S. corporations are "skimming" additional profits from international currency realignments that were intended to make U.S. exports more competitive.

Mr. Kearns told the San Francisco World Trade Club he made this "disturbing discovery" during a recent overseas trip.

"For example," he said, "one company, while not raising prices, eliminated distributor discounts and promptly the distributors turned to suppliers from other countries. The effect of such a practice is to wipe out the trade advantages from hard-won exchange (rate) adjustments," he said.

Instead of raising export prices to offset the effects of dollar devaluations, Mr. Kearns suggested the companies adopt what he called a "realistic view" that a moderately profitable sale of goods overseas "is immeasurably better than one which is lost while reaching for an illusory large profit."

Fund Cash-Ins Exceed Sales

WASHINGTON, May 18 (Reuters).—Net redemptions of mutual fund shares topped sales by $151.8 million in April, compared with $11.9 million in March, the Investment Company Institute said today.

On a seasonally adjusted basis, redemptions topped sales by $134 million in April, compared with $19 million in March.

Unadjusted sales in April were put at $300 million, sharply lower than the $519.3 million in March, which included an underwriting of $150 million. Redemptions totaled $451.8 million, compared with $531.4 million in March.

Net assets of mutual funds in April fell to $50.3 billion compared with $53.4 billion in March, reflecting the fall in stock prices.

Mutual fund holdings of cash and equivalents amounted to $3.8 billion, an increase of $63.1 million over March.

Stocks Take a Beating, Dow Index Plummets 16

By Vartanig G. Vartan

NEW YORK, May 18 (NYT).—Weighed down by the Watergate hearings and a host of other problems, the stock market reeled today under persistent pressure without the semblance of a rally. The phrase "a crisis of confidence" in the administration echoed in Wall Street.

The Dow Jones industrial average tumbled 16.56 to 895.17, bringing its loss for the full week to 32.81 points.

This marked the first time the Dow had finished below 900 during a period of more than 15 months. The industrial average registered its lowest closing since 839.15 on Jan. 26, 1972.

Gold stocks—the market's star group this spring—ran ahead sharply as the general list of stocks took a battering.

"The advance-decline figures are a horror show," declared one securities salesman. Bearing out his utterance, the New York Stock Exchange displayed only 179 advances and 1,359 declines.

Even more lopsided was the reading of 3 highs and 560 lows that showed one out of every three Big Board stocks sold at its lowest price of 1973 during the dismal session.

Contributing to the massive setback in stock prices was the move late Wednesday by the Federal Reserve Board to slow down bank credit. Another negative factor was the lead article in today's edition of The Wall Street Journal noting that some economic analysts detect the first signs that could signal a future recession.

"This market today," declared one Wall Streeter in rebuttal, "seems to be discounting the next three recessions."

Among the day's most active stocks in retreat were Pan American World Airways, off 1/4 to 7 7/8, Trans-World Airlines 1 3/8 to 25 3/8, Chrysler 2 to 26 1/2, American Telephone 5/8 to 52 1/8, and RCA 1 to 25.

IBM Drops 8

Less active and sharply lower were IBM, off 8 to 389, Burroughs 3 1/2 to 213 5/8, Lubrizol 2 to 35, Philip Morris 4 1/8 to 107 1/8, General Electric 1 1/2 to 56 1/4, Polaroid 2 7/8 to 125, Walt Disney 3 1/8 to 88 1/8, and Standard Oil of California 1 1/4 to 74 1/4.

Volatile Superior Oil plunged 18 to 225, with Corning Glass down 2 1/4 to 100.

Prices fell sharply in brisk trading on the American Stock Exchange. The Amex index lost 0.27 to 22.81, while declines topped advances, 858 against 121. Turnover was 4.10 million shares, up from 3.38 million yesterday.

IRISH LITERARY PORTRAITS

W.B. Yeats, James Joyce, George Moore, J.M. [illegible] George Bernard Shaw, Oliver St. John Gogarty, F.R. Higgins, AE (George Russell).

Edited by W. R. Rodgers. Taplinger. 236 pp. $7.95.

Reviewed by Nona Balakian

THE next best thing to hearing a literary Irishman talk is reading him talking: without the physical presence, we are robbed of the cadence and inflection (whoever said that all speech is prose?), the intense joviality that punctuates a never-ending spiral of opinion, and what can only be described as a demonic gaze, full of hints of more to come. But the talk has other qualities that cold print cannot destroy: a constant shower of imagery, unfailing humor (never really black)—and always a contagious delight in the vagaries of human personality. It is gossip with the highest of motives: to expose the individual's essence, what sets him apart from the crowd.

The reader who picks up this volume of spontaneous interviews will find himself straightway in this charmed circle where, in addition, a treat lies in store for those who respond to the ambiguities of character. However deeply our impressions of the Irish writers have been firmed by Richard Ellmann, Harold Bloom, Denis Donoghue, Horace Gregory, etc., we cannot fully appreciate the multifacetedness of Yeats, Joyce, Shaw and their Dublin contemporaries until we have seen them through one another's eyes. Lucky for us, that feat was made possible—at the 11th hour—when an Irish poet-minister-broadcaster, W. R. Rodgers, ventured to dredge the memories of the last survivors of the Irish Literary Movement.

In an ingenious series that ran on the British Broadcasting Corporation's Third Program from 1949 to 1966, he interviewed such prominent elder statesmen (many since dead) as St. John Gogarty, Sean O'Casey, St. John Ervine, Austin Clarke, Sean O'Faolain, as well as family members and old flames of the writers discussed, newspaper editors, headwaiters and even veterans of the Easter Uprising, who derived so much of their national fervor from the movement. Having recorded the witnesses separately and added his own useful commentary, Mr. Rodgers pulled the tapes together to provide, in each case, a kind of collage.

Mr. Rodgers called these "conversations" "studies in relationship," and warned his listeners that "truth is not the whole of life, or facts the whole of truth." The truth, in retrospect, is most often exactly the sum of the contradictions—with wispy pieces sliding out of the larger design. Take Yeats. Uppermost in O'Faolain's recollection is the "mask," the pose (cane, flowing tie, long hair) that came between the poet and his "natural self." But a younger contemporary, Frank O'Connor, observed "a peculiar sort of innocence" in Yeats appropriate to a romantic poet. The two writers dispute whether or not a poet "in search of the reality of time and place" should frequent pubs (Yeats didn't) or flaunt bow ties (Dublin poets did). And while a curiously unromantic Mrs. McBride (Maud Gonne) testifies that he was "wonderful at a committee meeting," a Dublin scholar, D[illegible] elaborates on Yeats's [illegible] "being always on a high[illegible]

he said. "It's going to be hard to pick one."

It isn't that hard for him to pick his next opponent. He wants Foreman again.

"I don't see no need to fight nobody else," he said. "I'm just hopin' he hurries back to me. Get that title back and make some money. Make some money for him, too. He can't make money fighting King Roman," meaning Joe (King) Roman, a Puerto Rican heavyweight who has been mentioned as a challenger in a Tokyo title bout. "He's got to come back here to me. Do it again, or get it over with, one or the other."

He shuffled out onto the gym floor. He hit the heavy bag, then the light bag. He skipped rope and finished with calisthenics as his perspiration splattered the wooden floor.

"I was 216 this morning. I won't be 214 for George like I was last time. I'll be 208, maybe less. I feel like my old self. I'm putting the combinations together again. I had my hands too high, not low enough. And now I know he hits harder than I thought."

"George hit like a mule. Like a big jackass mule we had. A big brown mule," he said. "My old man sent me to get a sack off the mule one time but that mule turned and kicked me straight in the forehead. I went down, but not out. George hit like that mule did."

His eyes narrowed as he stared across the gym at a picture of George Foreman on the far wall.

"George don't look that bad to me," the ex-champion said. "I'd bet half the purse with him."

Beats Twins, 5-4

Wilbur Wood Wins 9th Game

BLOOMINGTON, Minn., May 18 (UPI).—Wilbur Wood, moving 18 days ahead of Denny McLain's 31-game pace of 1968, struck out 10 but needed late-inning relief help to gain his ninth victory yesterday as the Chicago White Sox beat the Twins 5-4.

Wood is now 9-3, while McLain didn't win his ninth game until June 5 in 1968, when he posted a 31-6 record for the Detroit Tigers. McLain got his ninth victory in Detroit's 52nd game, Wood did it in Chicago's 30th game.

Wood, who was pitching with two days rest and allowed all eight Twins' hits, was knocked out in the Minnesota eighth when the Twins rallied for two runs. Cy Acosta pitched the last 1 1/3 innings to get the save.

Tigers 1, Red Sox 0

At Detroit, Tony Taylor, batting .173 going into the game, broke up a scoreless pitching duel between Jim Perry and John Curtis by hitting his second home run of the season to lead off the eighth inning, giving the Tigers a 1-0 victory over Boston.

Curtis, 1-4, had given up seven hits through the first seven innings but kept Detroit from scoring until Taylor hammered his second pitch of the eighth inning into the seats in right center. It was the Tigers' sixth victory over Boston in six games this season.

Perry allowed six hits, struck out four and walked three in raising his record to 5-2.

Yankees 4, Brewers 2

At New York, Graig Nettles' two-run homer off reliever Chris Short with one out in the 11th inning gave the Yankees a come-from-behind 4-2 victory over Milwaukee.

Nettles, who greeted Short in the ninth inning by hitting his first pitch for a game-tying single, hit his sixth homer of the season on the first pitch to him again, after Felipe Alou singled with one out and went all the way to third when the ball went through left-fielder Johnny Briggs for an error.

Orioles 4, Indians 1

At Cleveland, Jim Palmer, working with five days rest, pitched a three-hitter and barely missed his third straight shutout as Baltimore beat the Indians, 4-1.

The only hits off Palmer, who lowered his ERA to 1.93, were singles by Chris Chambliss in the fourth and Jack Brohamer in the seventh, and a one-out homer by Dave Duncan in the ninth.

Royals 6, Rangers 1

At Arlington, Texas, John Mayberry slammed a three-run homer and Amos Otis contributed a bases-empty homer to power Kansas City to a 6-1 victory over the Rangers.

The Royals were ahead, 2-1, when Otis hit his sixth homer of the year over the left-field wall in the sixth. In the seventh, singles by Fran Healy and Fred Patek and Mayberry's two-out homer, his 10th of the year, put the game out of reach.

A's 4, Angels 0

At Anaheim, Calif., Dick Green hit a three-run homer in the second inning—that resulted in a broken right leg to Bobby Valentine when he ran into the centerfield wall—and Oakland beat the Angels, 4-0.

Valentine, 23, fractured his leg five inches above his ankle when he struck a post behind the padded fence at Anaheim Stadium. He ran head first into the wall while chasing Green's first homer of the season.

Astros 2, Braves 1

In the National League, Ken Forsch pitched a four-hitter and Tommy Helms doubled home the winning run to lead Houston to a 2-1 victory at home over Atlanta, breaking a four-game Braves' winning streak.

Forsch, 4-3, gave up a run on two bloop hits in the fourth inning and then retired 15 of the last 17 men. Dusty Baker scored the Braves' run by looping a double down the right-field line and coming in on a single to center by Mike Lum. The loser was Pat Dobson, now 2-6.

Pirates 5, Phillies 2

At Pittsburgh, Dave Cash's bases-loaded double climaxed a three-run seventh inning rally to give the Pirates a 5-2 victory over Philadelphia and Steve Carlton.

The Pirates got to Carlton for two hits, two walks and an error for their three runs in the seventh after doubles by Carlton and Del Unser tied the game at 2-2 in the top of the inning.

Cards 5, Cubs 4

At Chicago, singles by pinch-hitter Ed Crosby and Lou Brock drove in ninth-inning runs to give St. Louis a 6-4 victory over the Cubs, running their winning streak to three games—their longest this season.

Reliever Jack Aker, the third of four Chicago pitchers, failed to get a man out in the ninth after Ken Reitz was safe on shortstop Don Kessinger's error to open the inning. Duane Anderson ran for Reitz, went to second on Mike Tyson's single and scored on Crosby's single. Brock's single scored Tyson.

Chris Evert ...couldn't refuse.

Chris Evert Lines Up for Shot at Riggs

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., May 18 (IHT).—Bobby Riggs, the one-time tennis master who proved last weekend against Mrs. Margaret Court that, at 55, he still knows how to hustle, has scored another point for the advancement of novelty sports. After a match against Billy Jean King in July, he will face teenage star Chris Evert.

Tennis promoter George Liddy, announcing the $50,000 challenge match here for Sept. 22, said: "It might draw as much interest as the Dempsey-Tunney fight." The analogy seemed apropos since, up to now, boxing was practically the only major sport in which courage was measured by the acceptance of a dare.

Liddy joked that he might seat women on one side of the stands and men on the other for the match.

Preakness: Racing's Historic Test

By Red Smith

BALTIMORE, May 18 (NYT).—It is billed "The 98th Preakness in 100 years," but when you explain that this means the race wasn't run in 1891-92-93 you aren't telling half of it. Since May 27, 1873, when a bay colt named Survivor won the inaugural running at a mile and a half, the Preakness has been contested at one mile, at a mile and 70 yards, a mile and 1/16, a mile and 1/8, a mile and 1/4 and a mile and 3/16, which is the distance that Secretariat, Sham and four others will go as fast as they are able tomorrow.

It is called the "middle jewel in the American triple crown"—between the Kentucky Derby and the Belmont Stakes—but in several years it preceded the Derby, in 1917 and 1922 it ran on the same day as the Derby, and in 1890 the race wandered away from Baltimore and showed up on the same card as the Belmont at Morris Park, where it was won by a 5-year-old named Montague.

Having strayed as far as New York's Westchester County, the Preakness didn't get back home until 1909. It was missing and presumed dead until Dave Woods, who used to handle Pimlico's public relations, discovered that a stakes named the Preakness had been run at the Brooklyn Jockey Club's Gravesend course from 1894 through 1908.

If it seems careless of the Maryland Jockey Club to mislay its most treasured classic for 20 years, remember that the club had to suspend operations during the French and Indian War, the revolution and the civil war, so continuity has lost its importance.

Named for Saloon

Now consider that the race commemorates a horse whose hot-tempered owner, the Duke of Hamliton, shot him dead, and that the course where the race is run was named for Olde Ben Pimlico's Taverne, a London saloon. Then, perhaps, you can savor a little of the flavor of this phase of Secretariat's quest for the triple crown.

In the circumstances, nobody was greatly surprised when the first horse entered in this Preakness was scratched at a cost of $1,000 and then drew the No. 1 post position which he will not occupy. Champagne Larry Boyce of nearby Glyndon, Md., paid the entry fee for The Lark Twist last Tuesday, then filed a declaration card withdrawing the colt and then asked for his $1,000 back. The stewards said no, but kept The Lark Twist in the draw as a formality.

Left to dispute the issue with Secretariat and his main rival, Sham, were: Our Native, the Flamingo Stakes winner; Ecole Etage, winner of the Preakness Prep; Torsion, fifth in the Prep, and Deadly Dream, winner of the Militia Handicap and Allegheny Stakes at Liberty Bell.

Deadly Dream was bought as a yearling for $3,200, which Frederick R. Menke earned selling cars in Annapolis. Menke hopes to collect third money of $15,000.

Torsion has never won a stakes. "He's a nice horse," says Johnny Campo, the plump pupil of Dale Carnegie who trains the colt for Thomas Mellon Evans of Greenwich, Conn., "but he can't beat these kind. The race is Secretariat and Sham.

"Then you'd be surprised if your horse won, John?" "Nah, I wouldn't be surprised. This is the business; you take your shots."

Bill Resseguet, trainer and quarter-owner of Our Native, is as plump as Campo and has approximately the same reason for challenging the top pair: "You can't win fights without getting in the ring."

As for Lucien Laurin, Secretariat's trainer, he ponied his horse to the track yesterday and watched raptly while the exercise boy, George Davis, galloped the colt twice around.

"It's in the hands of the Lord," Laurin said. "He's as good as a horse can get."

Sikes Is Ahead By One Stroke In Memphis Golf

MEMPHIS, May 18 (UPI).—Dan Sikes shot a five-under-par 67 yesterday for a one-stroke, first-round lead in the $175,000 Memphis Golf Tournament.

The long hitter from Jacksonville, Fla., rolled in six birdie putts of 1 inch to 12 feet. Dave Hill and Ron Cerrudo were at 68. Mike Hill, Allen Miller, Dale Douglass and Doug Sanders posted 70s.

Lee Trevino, looking for his third victory in a row here and needing a second-place finish to become golf's fourth million-dollar winner, started the morning with milk and honey, three poached eggs and two slabs of ham. Then he scrambled home at 71, with Gene Littler and several others.

"I'm in good shape," Trevino said. "You have to bide your time on this course or it will eat you alive."

Kermit Zarley also shot a 71 but was penalized two strokes for slow play and wound up at 73.

Sikes, 42, won $42,000 on the tour last year, but he already has picked up $40,572 in 10 tournaments this year.

Brazil's Players Evasive

PORTO ALEGRE, Brazil, May 18 (UPI).—Thirteen soccer players, including a center half-back on Brazil's World Cup team, have been charged with attempting to avoid military service by fraud. Officials said that Falcao, the World Cup player, and 12 other members of his team in the Rio Grande Do Sul State League, had registered for the draft with false certificates of residence, giving them addresses in two towns which have no draft calls.

Wings, Penguins Swap

DETROIT, May 18 (AP).—The Detroit Red Wings have traded defenseman Serge Lajeunesse going to Pittsburgh in exchange for defenseman Rick Foley.

Poor Conditions May Stop Auto Race in Belgium

ZOLDER, Belgium, May 18 (AP).—The Belgian Grand Prix appeared likely to be canceled Sunday after four cars crashed on a badly deteriorating track surface in the first practice session today. No one was injured.

Drivers in the world championship gave the organizers a final overnight chance to repair the Zolder circuit, after cancelling the second practice session.

But there was general pessimism that anything could be done to repair the surface, which was layed only this week.

American George Follmer, one of the victims of today's incidents, said, "There is no way this track can be repaired. It has been tried many times in the U.S. and it just doesn't work."

A Telegram for Nixon

WASHINGTON.—News item—It has been revealed that the Committee to Re-Elect the President sent thousands of telegrams to the White House supporting President Nixon's mining of Haiphong harbor. The White House was then able to claim that the American people were in favor of the action by more than five to one.

Buchwald

"Hello, Operator. I wish to send a telegram to the President of the United States at the White House."

"Yessir. Is this to be charged to the Committee to Re-Elect the President?"

"No, dammit, I want it charged to my own telephone number."

"Just a minute, I'm not sure we can do that. If you charge it to the Committee to Re-Elect the President we can give you a special group rate."

"I'm not interested in a group rate. I want to pay for this telegram in full."

"Well here's the problem, sir. If you charge it through the committee we can assure delivery. But if you send it on your own, it might take several days to get there."

"How's that?"

"The committee picks up the telegrams it sends and delivers them in its own truck. Of course, in order to qualify for this service, you would have to send a telegram favorable to the President."

"This telegram does not happen to be favorable to the President."

"Oh dear, that could be sticky for us. The White House refuses to sign a receipt for telegrams that are unfavorable to the President."

"Well I don't care if they sign for it or not. I just want it delivered. Now here's the text."

"Just a minute, sir. May I read you several form telegrams? You can send any one of them for 75 cents."

"No, I don't want to send a form telegram. Can't I just say what I want to?"

"The Committee to Re-Elect the President won't like that."

"I don't give a hoot about the Committee to Re-Elect the President."

"Well, we do. They're our best customers. They send 1,000 telegrams to the White House every day. And they get very annoyed if someone sends one on his own."

"Look, just write down what I have to say."

"The President depends on their telegrams. It lifts his spirit to know the American people are behind him."

"But if all the telegrams are sent by the Committee to Re-Elect the President, how does he know the American people are behind him?"

"The President doesn't know the telegrams come from the Committee to Re-Eelect the President, silly."

"But it's been in all the newspapers."

"The President doesn't read the papers. He just reads the telegrams."

"Don't you ever get telegrams from people who don't support the President?"

"Oh once in a while someone calls in and takes issue with a particular presidential decision."

"What do you do about it?"

"We take his number and report it to the Justice Department."

"What do they do with it?"

"They tap his telephone."

"Maybe I'd better not send this telegram after all."

"That's up to you, sir. After all it's a free country."

Campaign Target: Saving Europe's Monuments

PARIS, May 18 (UPI).—Four hundred experts will meet in Zurich July 4 to launch a campaign to save Europe's architectural treasures, a Council of Europe spokesman said today.

The four-day conference is being convened by the Swiss government under the auspices of the 17-nation council.

The spokesman said national committees from member states and delegates from international groups will propose action to make the public aware of its architectural heritage and the dangers which threaten it.

Producer-Director Prince Alive and Well on B'way

PARIS (IHT).—"This is," says Broadway producer-director Harold Prince, tugging on a red wool sock in one of those ultra-chic rooms in l'Hôtel that is as cute as a bug's ear and twice as small, "this is a marvelous time to live in!"

Extraordinary words for someone connected with Broadway, even for Hal Prince who has won 12 Tony awards and whose credits include "West Side Story," "Fiddler on the Roof," "Cabaret," and the new "A Little Night Music," which alone copped six Tonys this year. Far from being dead, dying or even a fabulous invalid, the Broadway theater is, according to Hal Prince, alive and well.

"We're getting our audience back," he says over tea. He is ebullient and vaguely piratical in a nicely trimmed beard. "We got kind of lulled by success into a soporific carriage trade theater. We lost the intelligentsia, the young people, but we're getting them back slowly."

One way Prince lures them back is by cutting prices on some of the seats for his sell-out hit, "A Little Night Music." New Yorkers, unused to getting something for nothing, or nearly nothing, refused at first to buy.

"You would have thought I was giving away leprosy," Prince says. "The theater-owner reasoned, and rightly, that those seats would have sold if we'd doubled the price."

If more conservative managements are unlikely to start reducing ticket prices, Hal Prince believes that in the near future audiences will be able to buy tickets for 55 cents as he did as a boy in New York.

"Cut-rate theater on a supply and demand basis is coming back. I used to go to Gray's drugstore and wait until one second before the curtain went up, and you could knock the price of an unsold ticket down to 55 cents.

"There's nothing like bad times to help," Hal Prince summarizes. "In other words, I welcome the bad times we've been going through."

For someone who has had three shows running at once, bad times may be a relative term, but Prince's earlier musical, "Follies," lost money and to launch "A Little Night Music" he actually had to lure in prospective backers by telephone (he did not, however, have to sink to a backers' audition, something he hasn't held since preparing his first show, "Pajama Game," in 1953).

"I felt a little pinched with 'Night Music'," Prince says. The pinching helped: the show has paid back 35 percent of its investment since opening in February. "Follies," on the other hand, which, like "Night Music," has music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, was an indulgence, Prince says.

"I thought I've done 'Fiddler on the Roof' and I deserve it if I want to do 'Follies'."

Prince went to work for veteran George Abbott after graduating from the University of Pennsylvania in 1948, and they still share offices (Prince's is decorated with a carnival wheel of fortune on which the names of some of his shows are painted).

With "Pajama Game" Hal Prince says he got typed as a pushy, brash, idiotically energetic boy-producer. He branched into directing, unsuccessfully until "Cabaret," whereupon he was typed as a director of musicals.

In fact he is fascinated by non-musicals. Last season he directed "The Great God Brown" for the Phoenix company and this coming season he will do Dürenmatt's "The Visit" for them as well as a new version of Leonard Bernstein's "Candide," with the Lilian Hellman book redone by Hugh Wheeler, for the Chelsea Theatre at Brooklyn Academy.

"What I'm doing," he says, "is constructing a theatrical career that's not so unusual in Europe. In Europe they go off and direct opera; they participate in a theater community outside their Broadway."

The New York Times.

Harold Prince in his New York office.

But Prince is not abandoning Broadway: he has had an idea for another musical and Stephen Sondheim is already at work. "He's sore at me because I dragged three musicals out of him in three and a half years," says Prince. "He says, 'All I've done is work, I've got to get back to filing.' He likes to file."

The one field where success has eluded him is films. His first picture as a director, "Something for Everyone," a sour little number that he describes happily as "a rotten, mean movie," was a flop. But he is planning now to film "Follies," which on the stage was about Ziegfeld Follies girls.

"The Ziegfeld Follies was a metaphor for the loss of innocence in our country," he says. "For the film we're going to enlarge the metaphor and take the last days in the life of a major film studio.

"When we did 'Follies' on Broadway, I believed the bottom had fallen out of everything and there was no place to go but down. Now I feel different, so the ending of the picture will be more hopeful. 'Night Music' may be part of the change—the idea that you have to create for yourself some fantasy, some innocence."

After such tough, strident musicals as "Company" and "Follies," "A Little Night Music," which is inspired by Ingmar Bergman's "Smiles of a Summer Night," is a gentle waltz musical that in Joshua Logan's words, "turns a familiar corner, but still a corner. Maybe it's getting us away from electronics and back to words."

"While we were working on 'Night Music,' we decided it was really an operetta, but we never mentioned it, we said for God's sake let's not tell anyone," Hal Prince says. In his enthusiastic review Clive Barnes used the word "operetta" at once and approvingly.

"It shows the change," Hal Prince says. "Ten years ago we would have been sunk with a word like that."

PEOPLE: Another View of FDR And His Secretary Missy

FDR's relationship with his secretary, Marguerite (Missy) Lehand, it is now generally agreed, was warmer than a professional one. A new book, "The FDR Memoirs," by Bernard Asbell, published by Doubleday and being serialized in the Ladies Home Journal, suggests that the late President's relationship with Miss Lehand was that of husband and wife except that they lived together platonically.

Thus the new book—which has an introduction by FDR's daughter, Anna Roosevelt Halsted—disagrees on a vital point with "An Untold Story," the recent book by FDR's son, Elliot Roosevelt. Elliott's book—which was also serialized in the Journal—said his father and Miss Lehand lived "a completely familial existence."

Asbell said that from 1925 to 1928, during FDR's visits to Warm Springs, Ga., "for at least half of each year, he has largely eased out of his ties with the woman to whom he is married, and substituted a young companion he employs, whose company he clearly prefers, who serves him not only as secretary and hostess but shares his fun during all his waking hours, is privy to the dark moments he is so careful not to show anyone else . . ."

He concludes, however, that despite the fact that doctors had reported no symptoms of impotence deriving from the polio attack that left FDR paralyzed, his affair with Missy Lehand was not sexual. Asbell quoted a former member of the FDR braintrust, Raymond Moley, as having said: "Everyone assumed he was indifferent to sex . . but he was interested in a different kind of relationship with a woman . . ."

Oz is no more. The underground monthly, which began publication in London in 1967, has suspended publication, ending a long guerrilla war against the square world whose values it derided. Richard Neville, who modeled Oz on a magazine he had established in Australia while an undergraduate at Sydney University, said it was going out of business voluntarily with debts totaling about $40,000. Most of this is owed to three printings firms.

In November, 1971, an appeals court quashed a 15-month prison sentence against Neville, reversing a verdict in which one issue of Oz was found to be obscene. The appeals court said, however, that individual articles in Oz were obscene and the case should have been tried on that basis. Neville said then that the ruling "means an end to the underground press as an effective force. Our hands have been . . . tied."

Maria Callas, in retirement in recent years, will resume her singing career in Europe in September, according to Le Figaro. The Paris daily, which gave no source for its prediction, said the famous diva and the Italian tenor Giuseppe de Stefano will give concerts in London, Hamburg, West Berlin, Munich, Düsseldorf and Frankfurt.

Merle Oberon, 62, says she will return to the screen in the role of—well, would you believe Mrs. Mahatma Gandhi? Variety, reporting from Acapulco, Mexico, quoted Miss Oberon as saying that "it's not a very big part but it means a new start and I feel I'm back where I belong."

The life story of the assassinated Indian leader will be filmed by Joe Levine's Avco Embassy Pictures, for which company she recently completed a film called "Interval." Miss Oberon was the producer of that one, in which she happened to have an investment of $400,000. She told Variety that "Interval" was a headache but it paid off because Levine had offered her the Gandhi role.

"Charge!" the general roared, and the Third Brazilian Army's ceremonial cavalry regiment, all 3,000 of them, thundered off at Sao Borja. Then, Gen. Oscar Luis Da Silva fell off his horse, and so did another general behind him. Both of them escaped with comparatively minor injuries.

After somebody stole Norma McCafferty's new bra from a clothesline in London's East End she boobytrapped her panties—sewing a bell into them—and hung those out as bait. In the small hours of the morning, the bell tinkled and an undercover policeman who had been staked out in the backyard pounced. The man he caught, who assured a judge that "there is nothing wrong with me," is being held for a medical examination.
